Ms Glenda Jackson: We are making very good progress, as my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister announced on 14 December 1998, Official Report, columns 623–34, during the second reading debate on the Greater London Authority Bill. Work is now under way to restructure London Underground in preparation for a competition to be held for the private sector to operate and invest in the upgrading of the Underground's infrastructure, into an operations company, which will remain in the public sector, and three infrastructure divisions. Subject to bids for the infrastructure divisions representing Best Value for the public sector they will transfer to the private sector for the duration of the Public-Private Partnership.

Mr. Caborn: Since 1 May 1997 my right hon. Friend has received six representations from local pressure groups and 11 representations from members of the public requesting that the planning application be called in.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Archive Collections

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what provision he has made in respect of archive collections in the context of the merger of the Museum and Galleries Commission and the Library and Information Commission. [65303]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The funding allocations for the new Museums, Libraries and Archives Council for the years 2000–01 and 2001–02 were set out in the document "A New Cultural Framework" which was placed in the Libraries of the House on 14 December 1998. Allocation of funds to particular areas of responsibility will be a decision for the board members of the new body.

Invest to Save Budget

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what projects have secured funding from the Invest to Save Budget. [65564]

Mr. Milburn: The Invest to Save Budget (ISB) was set up to help develop projects which bring together two or more public service bodies to deliver services in an innovative and efficient fashion. World Bank

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has taken to the World Bank, as a member of its board, to provide protection for developing countries from financial speculators. [62768]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 16 December 1998]: As Chairman of the G7 Finance Ministers, the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced on 30 October 1998 a far-reaching programme of reforms to strengthen the international financial system. On behalf of the G7, the Chancellor called on the World Bank, IMF and other international institutions to take forward work quickly on implementing these reforms, including the development by the World Bank of a code of general principles of good practice on social policy to ensure that governments have in place policies to tackle the social impact of sudden shocks to the financial system. In addition, the UK and other G7 countries committed themselves to strengthening in their own countries the regulatory focus on risk management in financial organisations, including in particular the implications arising from the operation of hedge funds and other highly leveraged financial organisations.

These reforms agreed by the G7 are designed to modernise the financial system to enable us to meet the challenges of today's global economy, minimise the risks of disruption, and maximise the benefits of globalisation to deliver greater opportunity and prosperity for all. The Chancellor recently met James Wolfensohn, President of the World Bank, and Michel Camdessus, Managing Director of the IMF, to discuss the implementation of these reforms and will continue to work closely with them on these issues.

Road Charging

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if charges levied in respect of (a) road pricing and (b) workplace charging will be subject to VAT. [63640]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 15 December 1998]: As the recent consultation document "Breaking the logjam" issued by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions said, there may be VAT implications for road user and workplace parking charges. A case is to be heard by the European Court of Justice on the VAT treatment of toll charges, and the outcome of this case will determine whether road user charges should bear VAT.

Single Currency (Convergence)

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the period which will be required for the UK economy to demonstrate sustainable convergence before entry into a single currency can take place. [65098]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 11 January 1999]: In his statement to the House of Commons on 27 October 1997, Official Report, columns 583–606, the Chancellor of the Exchequer said that, barring some fundamental and unforeseen change in economic circumstances, there is no realistic prospect of the UK economy having demonstrated, before the end of this Parliament, convergence which is sustainable and settled rather than transitory. It is essential that Government and business prepare during this Parliament, to create a genuine option of joining a successful single currency early in the next Parliament.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families, broken down by family income, are likely to receive both the working families tax credit and housing benefit. [64674]

Dawn Primarolo: Estimates for 1999–2000 of the number of families in receipt of both the Working Families Tax Credit and Housing Benefit are given in the table.

Gross weekly family income	Number of families
Less than £60	50,000
£60-£99.99	75,000
£100-£149.99	50,000
£150 and over	50,000
Total	225,000

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the numbers of families who will be eligible for the working families tax credit, and their average net pay, comprising (a) a male as the main earner and their partner and (b) a female as the main earner and their partner, with in each case (i) one child, (ii) two children, (iii) three children and (iv) four or more children under eight years of age. [64227]

Dawn Primarolo: I regret that estimates at this level of detail are not available.

Golf Clubs (VAT)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review the provisions of the Value Added Tax (Sport, Sports Competition and Physical Education) Order 1998 to resolve the different VAT treatment of private and proprietary golf clubs. [65161]

Dawn Primarolo: The Order, which was designed to prevent tax avoidance, was withdrawn and an announcement about a replacement will be made as soon as possible. The Government understand the problems of both types of golf club and have arranged for HM Customs and Excise to discuss these with the European Commission, in the light of the recent European Court of Justice ruling in Commission of the European Communities vs the Kingdom of Spain (Case C-124/96, Judgment of the Court, Sixth Chamber, of 7 May 1998).

HOME DEPARTMENT

Firearms Compensation

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many claims for compensation are outstanding under each option in the large and small calibre firearms compensation schemes; what is the average amount of time taken to process a claim under each option; when he expects all claims under each category to have been completed; and if he will make a statement. [64953]

Mr. Boateng: Payments under Options A and B of the compensation schemes for large calibre handguns and small calibre pistols have been completed, apart from a small number of cases still under inquiry, in an average processing time of 21 weeks. The average processing time for claims processed so far under Option C of the schemes is 58 weeks. There are around 16,500 claims awaiting payment offers under Option C, and the aim is to complete these by the end of March if at all possible. In the great majority of these cases, payments have already been made under Options A and B.

I outlined the measures we are taking to speed the processing of these compensation claims in my reply to the hon. Member for Tewkesbury (Mr. Robertson) on 28 October 1998, Official Report, columns 179–80.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many firearms have been surrendered under the terms of the Firearms (Amendment) Acts 1997; and what has been the cost to the Exchequer to date. [65237]

Mr. Boateng: A total of 162,198 large and small-calibre handguns were surrendered, £67.2 million has so far been paid in compensation.

Young Offenders

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of the prison population was under the age of 21 years on 30 December. [65290]

Mr. George Howarth: The currently available information relates to the population on the last day of November 1998. On that date, 16 per cent. of the prison population in England and Wales were aged under 21 years.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the education facilities that are available to young people of school age who are serving sentences in prisons in England and Wales. [65288]

Mr. George Howarth: There is a statutory requirement to provide prisoners under the age of 17 years with 15 hours academic education including English, mathematics, life skills relevant to their age, and information technology together with a minimum of 5 hours physical education.

Prison education for all prisoners focuses on the core curriculum of basic educational skills (literacy and numeracy), life and social skills and computer skills.

The Prison Service is currently developing new regime standards for young people under the age of 18. They will include the development of a broader education curriculum for young people under school leaving age which will take into account their particular learning difficulties, especially dyslexia, attention deficits and hyper-activity disorder and any statement of educational needs. The comprehensive spending review has made additional funds available for achieving the new standards.

The Prison Service is also planning to introduce an individual programme for each young person. It will be based on a thorough assessment and will include an action plan and programme suited to individual needs, ability and aptitude.

Prisoners (Self-harm)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many recorded incidents there were in prisons in England and Wales of inmates causing self-harm in the last years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [65289]

Mr. George Howarth: The number of self-harm incidents reported by Prison Service establishments in the three years between 1995–96 and 1997–98 is set out in the table. Some caution is required in interpreting the table. A number of factors influence the pattern of figures across establishments and time. For instance, there would be a higher volume of prisoners associated with local prisons and a single disturbed prisoner can be responsible for a large number of self-harm incidents in any one year.

The Prison Service is developing a range of measures to reduce levels of self-harm including: reviewing screening processes to identify those at risk; sharing good practice; improving cell design to produce a safer environment; and conducting research into suicide and self-injury.

The Government take a particular interest in this important area of work. My noble Friend Lord Williams chairs a regular meeting between the Prison Service and a range of representatives from groups interested in prison suicides. These include: the Samaritans; Howard League; Prison Reform Trust; Inquest and the Board of Visitors. The meetings are held to discuss how the Prison Service and these groups can work more closely together to try to reduce the rate of suicides and instances of self-harm.

We welcome the current thematic review of suicide and self-harm conducted by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons and look forward to seeing his report which is soon to be published.

Racist Attacks

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has had from (a) the Runnymede Trust, (b) the Maimonides Foundation and (c) the Calanos Foundation about increased racist attacks following military action against Iraq. [65375]

Mr. Boateng: I have received no representations from the Runnymede Trust, the Maimonides Foundation or the Calanos Foundation on this matter.

Passports

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on current practice concerning the return of passports to those who make applications. [65167]

Kate Hoey: The Immigration and Nationality Directorate's (IND) normal practice is to return passports by second class post when the application has been decided. Applicants may of course ask for passports to be returned earlier, to collect them personally, or may stipulate and pay for alternative delivery arrangements. As the Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. O'Brien) explained in his letter of 18 November last to hon. Members, IND is currently undergoing major organisational changes aimed at improving the way it handles casework. Urgent work, including the return of passports to applicants for travel, has continued to receive priority treatment during this transitional period, but the upheaval associated with the process of change has impacted upon the service IND is able to provide to applicants. IND is currently unable to expedite the cases of applicants wishing to travel; passports required urgently for travel during the brief transitional period will therefore be returned unendorsed.

Passports submitted to the Passport Agency for renewal are returned to applicants having been cancelled when their applications have been processed. These are returned by first class post unless the applicant requests and pays for delivery by registered post. In exceptional circumstances applicants are not required to leave behind their existing passports while obtaining a renewal. If they call into an Office the passport can be checked and handed back. When the new passport is collected the existing one can be cancelled. New passports are normally sent out using first class post. The passports of customers calling in person at the Agency's Offices are returned by first class post except when applicants are travelling urgently and prefer to collect their passports. The Passport Agency asks customers to apply for passports at least one month ahead of their travel dates although normally properly completed applications are processed within 10 working days of receipt.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passports were lost by the Home Office in 1998 and what compensation was paid as a result. [65166]

Kate Hoey: The available records show that ex-gratia payments totalling £11,256 were made or offered in 1998 in respect of 69 claims for passports or other documents lost in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate.

Information on passports lost in the Passport Agency's offices is not recorded, but such loss is extremely rare. Lost passports and documents submitted in support of passport applications are replaced free of charge to the applicant.

Drugs Misuse (Promotional Literature)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the (a) publication and (b) availability of literature which encourages drugs misuse. [63745]

Mr. George Howarth: Encouragement of the misuse of drugs is always to be deplored. The publication of material which incites its readers to misuse drugs may constitute an offence under section 19 of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971.

If the hon. Member is aware of any literature which may constitute an offence, if he refers it to me, I will draw it to the attention of the appropriate authorities.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Prepaid Envelopes

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee how much was spent on prepaid envelopes for hon. and right hon. Members in each financial year since 1980. [65640]

Mrs. Roe: This is a matter for the Serjeant at Arms; I have asked him to write to the hon. Member.

Christmas Lunches

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee whose decision it was to offer free Christmas lunches to parliamentary staff. [65081]

Mr. Dennis Turner: It was the decision of the Director of Catering Services to offer a free Christmas lunch to all passholders taking lunch in Refreshment Department Cafeterias. I endorse fully her decision, as I consider it to be a small gesture by which to thank all staff, whether House or of hon. Members, for their help and support throughout the year.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministerial Visit (Lancaster and Wyre)

Q17. Mr. Dawson: To ask the Prime Minister when he intends to visit the Lancaster and Wyre constituency. [63766]

The Prime Minister: I have no immediate plans to do so.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what contact he has had with Sheikh Zayed bin Sultan al Nahyan of the United Arab Emirates about the bombing raids on Iraq. [65383]

The Prime Minister: I sent messages to Sheikh Zayed once military action had started and once it had ended, explaining our thinking on Iraq. Our Embassy in Abu Dhabi remained in close contact with key members of the U.A.E. Government throughout the period of military action.

WALES

Local Government Finance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is for each county in Wales the percentage increase in external support for revenue programmes from 1998–99 to 1999–2000. [65302]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The percentage increases in external support towards standard spending assessments between 1998–99 and 1999–2000 are shown in the following table.

Percentage increase in external support towards Standard Spending Assessments between 1998–99 and 1999–2000 [1,2]

[1] External support towards standard spending assessments includes revenue support grant, re-distributed non-domestic rates and council tax reduction scheme grant.

[2] Increases are between external support towards standard spending assessments for 1998–99, as set out in the Local Government Finance (Amendment) Report (Wales) 1998–99 which has yet to be debated by the House of Commons, and provisional 1999–2000 figures as announced by the Secretary of State for Wales on 14 December 1998.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the total cost to local government in Wales in 1999–2000 of the 2 per cent. increase in employees' pension contribution rates; and if he will make a statement. [65262]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: No. Any increase in costs will depend on individual authorities' decisions on staffing levels. My right hon. Friend has taken into account local government's own view of need to spend in 1999–2000 in making his proposals for local government revenue spending; details of which were announced on 9 December 1998, Official Report, columns 229–30, and 14 December 1998, columns 390–91.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Emphysema

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will indicate (a) what has been the total cost to date, including legal costs, of devising a compensation scheme for miners suffering from chronic bronchitis emphysema, (b) when he expects a scheme to be operative and (c) what is the number of cases currently formally lodged with solicitors. [64700]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 11 January 1999]: (a) Since the judgment was handed down in January last year some £900,000 has been incurred by Department advisers, including principally Counsel, external solicitors and medical experts. The costs of DTI staff and of staff working for IRISC, the Department's claim handler, on this work cannot be separately identified.

(b) Significant progress has been made in recent weeks in negotiations between the Department and the plaintiffs' solicitors on agreeing the arrangements for handling the many thousands of claims from miners or their widows. I am optimistic a final agreement on a medical assessment procedure to establish the levels of injury and the resulting disability will be reached in the near future. There will need to be a tendering process for the required medical services. A national programme of spirometry (lung function testing) will begin by the spring which should enable us to make significant numbers of interim offers. Full and final settlements based on the full medical assessment process should start to flow early in the second half of 1999.

(c) As at 1 January some 65,000 claims have been received by IRISC, the Department's claim handlers. We do not know how many further claims may be lodged with claimants' solicitors.

Vibration White Finger

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will state (a) what has been the cost to date, including the legal costs, of devising a compensation scheme for miners suffering from vibration white finger, (b) when he expects a scheme to be operative and (c) what is the number of cases currently informally lodged with solicitors. [64699]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 11 January 1999]: (a) Since the judgment was handed down in September 1997 some £1.1 million has been incurred by Departmental advisers, including principally Counsel, external solicitors and medical experts. The costs of DTI staff and of staff working for IRISC, the Department's claim handler, on this work cannot be separately identified.

(b) Significant progress has been made in the last few weeks in negotiating a scheme for compensating ex-miners with Vibration White Finger. I am optimistic that an agreement will be reached shortly. We began piloting the single medical assessment proc[illegible] at our testing centre in Sheffield on 1 December and [illegible] final agreement is reached, would hope to extend it [illegible]onally by the spring.

(c) As at 1 January some 31,000 claims have been received by IRISC, the Department's claim handlers. We do not know how many further claims may be lodged with claimants' solicitors.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will consult with local authorities on revising UK assisted areas. [65164]

Mr. Wills: During the public consultation period on the review of Assisted Areas, my Department consulted with local authorities, and other key bodies. We are currently considering their responses.

Scientific Research

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of Government expenditure in each EU country has been on scientific research for each year since 1986–87. [64842]

Mr. Battle: Separating out the cost of scientific research from the overall research and development figure is not possible. However, the percentage of central government expenditure used to support research and development in each EU country over the period 1986 to 1996, derived from OECD data, is as follows:

DEFENCE

Military Survey Defence Agency

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Chief Executive of the Military Survey Defence Agency for 1998–99. [65252]

Mr. Spellar: The role of the Military Survey Defence Agency is to ensure the provision of geographic support to defence operations, planning and training. The Key Targets for the Agency for the 12 months from April 1998 are:

Key Target 1:

To satisfy 100 per cent. of requirement for geographic support to current operations within the timescales agreed between the Agency and its customers.

Key Target 2:

To agree with the Joint Customer Group, by March 1999, a process for measuring the degree of customer satisfaction with the service provided.

Key Target 3:

To complete the agreed annual production programme on time and to cost.

Key Target 4:

To establish by March 1999 a process for measuring the degree of satisfaction the Library service provides.

Key Target 5:

To maintain the readiness state of the required Field Support elements of the Agency as required by the Department.

Key Target 6:

To achieve a 2.5 per cent. improvement in efficiency.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the circumstances in which missiles landed on the Hail Adel residential district of Baghdad during the recent raids on Iraq. [65382]

Mr. George Robertson: No missiles were fired by UK forces in the course of Operation Desert Fox. Questions relating to the circumstances of individual missile attacks are therefore a matter for the US authorities. Throughout Desert Fox the greatest care was taken to avoid any collateral damage and I am confident that any that did occur was limited.

However, the US authorities believe that a US cruise missile may have been shot down on the night of 16–17 December and landed in the Al Karradah area of Baghdad, which is immediately adjacent to the Hail Adel district. They assess that it did not cause any significant damage. The missile was not targeted on a residential area.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Montserrat

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress has been made in concluding the Country Policy Plan for Montserrat. [66004]

Clare Short: The Country Policy Plan (CPP) negotiations took place on Montserrat between 16–20 November between a joint DFID/FCO team and the Government of Montserrat (GoM). My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State has today in Montserrat formally signed the agreement with Chief Minister Brandt.

The CPP sets out (a) GoM's commitment to open and transparent goverment and to key democratic principles and (b) the general principles guiding HMG's relations with its Overseas Territories and specific commitments to Montserrat including the £75m available through DFID's bilateral programme for the period 1998–99 to 2000–01.

The CPP contains a series of policy matrices which set out objectives and timebound actions for each sector. These include both the commitment to implement existing policies and to take decisions on outstanding policy issues. The most important include:

Social Sectors: implementation of a social welfare review to improve the targeting and delivery of support to the neediest, and reivew of the case for restoration of post-secondary and vocational education on the basis of the population on-island;

Public Administration: a job evaluation exercise and review of terms and conditions of service for completion by early 2000 to improve recruitment and retention of staff with marketable skills;

Public Finance: a review of the tax incentive regime in 1999 to ensure an appropriate balance between providing incentives for private sector activity and maintaining an adequate revenue base;

Infrastructure: agreement on provision of a fixed wing airlink facility in 1999;

Productive Sectors: a business opportunity survey to improve the information available to potential investors.

All policy matrices are consistent with the HMG/GoM Sustainable Development Plan (SDP) and with the Public Sector Investment Programme (PSIP) which forms part of the CPP and sets out ongoing and possible new projects for the period 1998–2000.

The draft PSIP is costed at EC$372m (£85m). After deduction of other donor funded projects, the total of projects earmarked for DFID is £82m. This is consistent with the £75m resource envelope as a degree of over-planning is necessary to ensure full use of the resources. The draft PSIP does not yet take account of all of the EDF resources that will become available in 1999 which will be subject to separate negotiations later this year.

A copy of the CPP will be placed in the Libary of the House.

Tree Planting

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many trees have been planted in England and Wales on Forestry Commission land in each of the last three years. [64292]

Mr. Macdonald: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by Forest Enterprise. I have asked its Chief Executive, Dr. Bob McIntosh, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Bob McIntosh to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 13 January 1999:

The Secretary of State for Scotland has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of trees that have been planted in England and Wales, on Forestry Commission land, in each of the last three years.

We do publish in our Annual Reports this information on an area basis. I have, therefore, set out on the attached sheet the area of land planted, both new planting and restocking, for each of the last 3 years. I have added a column showing the number of trees planted using an appropriate multiplier.

I hope this gives the information you require.

HEALTH

A and E Wards (London)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement urgently on the condition of accident and emergency wards in London. [64907]

Mr. Denham: We recognise the importance of improving the standard of facilities and equipment in accident and emergency departments. In response to Sir Leslie Turnberg's review, we are taking action to ensure that all Londoners have access to high quality hospital services, with appropriate accident and emergency provision. £30 million from next year's modernisation fund for capital has been earmarked for investment in accident and emergency departments of which £4.367 million has been allocated to London. These resources will be used to provide improved services for patients and a safer working environment for staff. Funds will be allocated across a range of schemes.

Interstitial Cystitis

Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are being treated for interstitial cystitis; what estimate he has made of the cost of their treatment; and what research is currently taking place on this illness. [64562]

Mr. Hutton: The majority of patients with interstitial cystitis are treated in primary care or in outpatients. Information on the numbers of such patients is not collected centrally. A minority of patients require treatment in hospitals and in 1997/98 there were 2,136 admissions in which the primary diagnosis was recorded as interstitial cystitis. The cost of treating these patients cannot be separately identified. There are various studies and reports relating to interstitial cystitis published in the medical journals associated with urology and gynaecology, and a range of surgical and non-surgical treatments available or on trial. The Department is not currently funding any specific research in this area.

Pensions

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will backdate the pension arrangements for widowers of female doctors to align them with the pension arrangements for widows of male doctors. [65114]

Mr. Denham: The National Health Service Pension Scheme provides equal survivor benefits for legal spouses on service from 6 April 1988. A scheme was available until June 1989 which allowed female members to purchase widowers' cover for earlier service, the costs being shared with NHS employers. The capitalised cost of backdating widowers' cover, updated to take account of pay rises, is now estimated to be in the order of £500 million. These costs would have to be paid in full by the whole membership and there is no indication that they would be willing to do so.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

London Underground

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been spent to date on legal, financial and other consultancy costs for the public/private partnership for London Underground. [64573]

Ms Glenda Jackson: London Transport employs a number of firms to provide advice on implementing the PPP, jointly to LT and the Government. this innovative arrangement ensures that LT and the Government receive the best advice, while minimising the overall cost of implementing the PPP.

I understand from London Transport that their expenditure on external consultants, from 20 March 1998 (the date of the Government's announcement) to 2 January 1999, for work on the PPP and restructuring London Underground was £9.85 million. For reasons of commercial confidentiality, it is not possible to give figures for the costs of employing individual firms. For the future, I intend to publish updated figures at the end of the financial year and, therefore, at six-monthly intervals.

Drivers' Licences

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of (i) men and (ii) women resident in Britain (1) in total and (2) between the ages of (a) 17 and 34 and (b) 35 and 60 years hold a current UK driver's licence. [64764]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The number of male and female full licence holders in Great Britain in total and by age band, as at October 1998 is as follows:

Million

	Male	Female
Total 16 and over	18.714	13.903
35–60	9.387	7.260

The latest estimates available for the Great Britain resident population (Office for National Statistics) relate to 1997, and a comparison of the total full licence holder figures for 1997 with these population figures for those aged 16 and over gives the following results:

	Male	Female
Licence holders (million)	18.657	13.672
Resident population (million)	22.171	23.468
Percentage licence holders	84.2	58.3

Due to inconsistencies in the data there are difficulties in providing a break-down of these overall percentages by age group. My noble Friend the Minister for Roads and Road Safety will write to the hon. Member with further details.

Local Authority Housing Authorities

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list all local authority housing authorities specifying in respect of each whether the chair is a man or a woman. [65318]

Mr. Raynsford: This information is not held centrally.

Leylandii Trees

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will report on the progress of the Government's review of the legislation surrounding problems caused by leylandii trees; and when an announcement is expected to be made. [65277]

Mr. Meale: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Colchester (Mr. Russell) on 17 November 1998, Official Report, column 473.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will provide a breakdown of the changes to the criteria for calculating the Social Services SSA block in the local government settlements for 1999–2000. [65035]

Ms Armstrong: The changes proposed to the method of calculating standard spending assessments for 1999–2000 are:

(i) Changing the formula for children's social services on the basis of research carried out by the University of York, and including an allowance for the higher costs of foster care in some areas;

(ii) Changing the formula for elderly residential social services to: include claimants of disability living allowance; update gross costs and income from charges to allow for the effects of community care; and change the measure of elderly population to exclude people living in institutions rather than in private households; and

(iii) Changing the formula for elderly domiciliary social services to include an allowance for sparsity of population to distribute 0.5 per cent. of the total of this element of the SSA; and to adjust the cost allowance of each elderly domiciliary client to take account of each authority's potential to raise income from charges.

National Air Quality Strategy

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will announce the outcome of the Review of the UK National Air Quality Strategy. [65561]

Mr. Prescott: I am pleased to announce today our proposals to amend the UK National Air Quality Strategy. Cleaning up the air that we breathe and delivering on the right to clean air is one of the top priorities of this Government. There is still some way to go to protect our health and the environment from the effects of air pollution. The proposals that I am announcing today deliver on our pre-election commitment to the right to clean air. But improving air quality is not just for Government, or industry, we all have a responsibility to do our bit to improve the quality of our air.

The National Air Quality Strategy was first published in March 1997 fulfilling the requirement under the Environment Act 1995 for a national air quality strategy setting out policies for the management of ambient air quality. The Government endorsed this Strategy in July 1997, but announced that it would be reviewed at the earliest opportunity in order to look at the prospects for delivering cleaner air more quickly. The Government accordingly brought forward to the end of 1998 the previously announced review, and as a result we have been able to make rapid progress on delivering our commitment to the right to clean air.

The Strategy sets health-based objectives for 2005 for the eight air pollutants which have the greatest impact on health. Our aim in the review was to look at the prospects for meeting the objectives sooner or introducing tougher objectives where feasible and justified. This has been a thorough and wide-ranging review, during which we considered the legal framework, the scientific, economic and technical basis for decision-making on air quality policy, and the case for changes to the scope and content of the Strategy. My Department has worked closely with the Scottish Office, Welsh Office and Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland and we have consulted widely with stakeholders in producing our proposals.

We have now completed the review and propose to tighten the objectives for five pollutants; for benzene, 1,3-butadiene and carbon monoxide we propose to bring forward the date for achieving the objectives; for lead we propose to bring forward the date for achieving the existing objective and to introduce a new tougher objective based on the most recent health advice; for nitrogen dioxide we propose to introduce a tougher hourly objective, while retaining the current annual objective. Action is in progress at EU level on ozone and we have concluded that it makes sense to await the outcome of that before deciding how to move forward on this pollutant. On particles (PM^{10}) the work of the Airborne Particles Expert Group has shown that exceedences of our national objective are strongly influenced by sources from mainland Europe. This is not a problem that the UK can solve alone. We intend to discuss with our European partners how best this issue can be taken forward at the European level. In addition, it is not yet clear whether PM^{10} or a smaller fraction of particles poses the greater threat to health. We have concluded that in the short term to incorporate the proposed EU vales for PM^{10} will provide adequate protection as an interim step towards achieving the existing objective. We will look at this objective again, as well as those for nitrogen dioxide, when we undertake a further review of the Strategy in two years time. On sulphur dioxide, we propose to retain the existing objective, supplemented by the proposed EU limit values. We are also proposing to extend the Strategy to include objectives for the protection of vegetation and ecosystems. The changes we propose will also ensure that we deliver the limit values contained in the proposed first Air Quality Daughter Directive.

We will now consult widely on our proposals. We will produce a revised Strategy later this year, which will itself be subject to consultation before being finalised by the end of the year. This is the first in a rolling programme of reviews of the Strategy, to keep it up to date with technological and scientific advances, improved modelling techniques, an increasingly better understanding of the economic and social issues involved and to reflect developments in European legislation. We intend that the next review of the Strategy should start once this one is complete and further information is available on costs and benefits, the health effects of air pollution and the impact that policy measures will have on improving air quality.

We all have a responsibility to do our bit to improve the quality of the air that we breathe and the environment that we live in. The proposals that we have announced today set in place the framework to take this forward. I have placed copies of our consultation document in the Libraries of the House and the Vote Office.

Sporting Facilities

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made in his revision of the current Planning Guidance Note for Sport and Recreation (PPG17). [65431]

Mr. Raynsford: In September last year, the Department published a research report entitled The Effectiveness of Planning Policy Guidance on Sport and Recreation which made recommendations about possible revisions that might be made to PPG 17. A number of regional seminars have sequently been held to take views on the recommendations set out in the report. A draft revised PPG will be issued for consultation later this year.

Environmental Policy

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out his responsibilities in respect of the co-ordination of Government policy on environmental issues. [63731]

Mr. Meale: Under the leadership of my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister, the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions has policy responsibilities for sustainable development and the environment, including for 'greening' Government. The Deputy Prime Minister chairs the Cabinet Committee on the Environment (ENV) which considers environmental policies and co-ordinates those on sustainable development. My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment chairs regular meetings of the Green Ministers Committee, and provides reports on the work of that Committee to the Chairman of ENV. Green Ministers are reponsible for ensuring that the right systems are in place in their Departments to support the integration of environmental considerations into policy making and operations.

Correspondence

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Tunbridge Wells dated 29 September, about the A21 in Kent; [65435]

(2) when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Tunbridge Wells dated 7 September, about the A21 in Kent; [65436]

(3) when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Tunbridge Wells dated 26 November, about the A21 in Kent. [65437]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My noble Friend the Minister for Roads and Road Safety replied on Tuesday 12 January 1999.

Air Traffic (Stansted)

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to consult on BAA plc's application to raise the Passenger Air Transport Movement limit at Stansted Airport. [65756]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I am publishing today a consultation paper on the application by BAA for an increase in the ceiling on passenger air transport movements (the number of passenger aircraft take-offs and landings) at Stansted Airport. BAA are seeking an increase from 120,000 movements a year to 185,000.

Stansted is the only UK airport to have a PATM limit set by the Government, and has had one since 1987. The purpose is to allow expansion of the airport to be phased so that the necessary supporting infrastructure can keep pace with the expansion, and for an appropriate balance to be struck between local and aviation interests.

Copies are being placed in the Libraries of the House and are available from the Department. The closing date for responses to the consultation is 12 March 1999.

Rent Increases

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1998, Official Report, columns 638–39, what progress he has made in making an Order under section 31 of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1985 to limit exceptionally high fair rent increases. [65870]

Mr. Raynsford: The Rent Acts (Maximum Fair Rent) Order 1999 (SI 1999/No. 6) was laid before Parliament on Monday 11 January 1999 and will come into force on Monday 1 February 1999. My Department will be issuing an explanatory leaflet about the new limits later this month. Details will also appear on our internet site.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the proportion of those whose earnings will move (a) below and (b) above the £9,000 threshold to stakeholder pension during the first decade of the scheme's life. [65173]

Mr. Timms: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those people who suggested abolition of the current pension system referred to in paragraph 36 of the summary of "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions". [64849]

Mr. Timms: Of the more than 2,000 submissions to the Pensions Review, a small number suggested abolition of the current pension system referred to in paragraph 36 of the summary of the Green Paper, "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions".

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to link the £9,000 entrance into stakeholder pensions to (a) earnings and (b) prices. [65174]

Mr. Timms: As explained in the Green Paper on pensions "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions" the new thresholds of £9,000 and £18,500 for State Second Pension will be uprated in line with average earnings.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the data supporting the statement in paragraph 7 of the third chapter of "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions" that over a whole working life more people are experiencing periods on both lower and higher income. [64943]

Mr. Timms: The increased likelihood of income fluctuations is due to the changes in the labour market and modern society discussed in paragraph 7 of the third chapter of "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions". Increases in the numbers of self-employed, part-time and temporary workers mean that people's incomes from earnings are more likely to be unevenly distributed over time, making it more difficult for people to build up pension rights.

The distribution of income has also widened considerably since 1979. This is partly due to an increase in the number of people living in workless households. This trend could reflect increased fluctuations in people's incomes if it is the result of people experiencing more periods of worklessness over the life cycle.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to be able to bring forward proposals to assist those workers earning below the lower earnings level who are not covered by the reforms in "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions". [64935]

Mr. Timms: Our objectives are to provide security for those who cannot provide for themselves and to make it easier for people who can save, to do so. Currently there are many people who cannot provide for themselves in retirement because they are outside the labour market or because their earnings are low as a consequence of the number of hours they work or their hourly rates of pay. The introduction of the national minimum wage will ensure that those working substantial numbers of hours are paid at levels which mean they are able to build up entitlement to a basic pension.

We recognise that there remains a group of people, mainly women, who are active in the labour market but whose access to contributory pensions is affected by the fact that they work part-time on low earnings for long periods. As signalled in the Green Paper "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions", we will be considering whether more needs to be done to assist this group within the National Insurance scheme. Those pensioners who are not able to build up an adequate pension during their working lifetime will be able to receive the minimum income guarantee.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of private pensions which give poor value. [64941]

Mr. Timms: The Green Paper "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions" indicates that some types of personal pensions can be unsuitable for people who have low or intermittent earnings, or who cannot maintain the regular contributions required. It is not possible to quantify the number of pensions which provide poor value, since this depends both on the terms of individual arrangements and on the subsequent circumstances of those who take them out. This is why we have brought forward proposals for new stakeholder pension schemes.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will estimate how many (a) carers and (b) people with disabilities will (i) no longer be and (ii) remain dependent on means-tested benefits in retirement once the proposals in "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions" are fully operative; [64818]

(2) what will be, in each of the next five decades, the proportion of (a) pension payments, (b) national insurance rebates and (c) tax benefits going to each decile group of the population (i) under the current arrangement and (ii) as a result of the reforms advocated in "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions". [64942]

Mr. Timms: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of pensioners retiring in each of the next five decades will be (a) totally dependent on means-tested benefits and (b) dependent upon means-tested benefits for part of their pensioner lives, if the proposals in "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions" are not enacted. [64977]

Mr. Timms: The information requested is not available.

Projections forward to the year 2050 are subject to a high degree of uncertainty, given the number of assumptions that need to be made in making these estimates. Some of those who will be pensioners in 2050 have yet to begin work, and most are today in their 20s and 30s.

Estimates of the number of pensioners receiving the Minimum Income Guarantee have been made by extrapolating estimates from the PENSIM model, but these can only give a broad indication of the likely order of magnitude of figures so far into the future. The PENSIM projections can only be applied to estimates of pensioners on the Minimum Income Guarantee at a particular point in time.

Estimates suggest that approximately 1.5 million pensioners (around 1 in 5, or 20 per cent.) will receive payments from the Minimum Income Guarantee when it is introduced in April 1999. On the basis of unchanged policies, estimates suggest that approximately 3.5 million pensioners (1 in 3) in 2050 could rely on the Minimum Income Guarantee. Even if no behaviour changes are assumed, the new insurance contract for pensions will mean that these estimates are reduced to approximately 2.5 million pensioners (1 in 4) receiving income from the Minimum Income Guarantee in 2050, and a lower proportion in years after 2050.

Estimates for other income related benefits (such as Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit), or of changes in the circumstances of individuals over time, are not available, as these projections would require many more assumptions to be made and would be surrounded by an unacceptable level of uncertainty.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number and percentage of pensioners eligible for the Government's new income guarantee for all pensioners (a) at the inception of the scheme and (b) at 10 yearly intervals for the following five decades. [64939]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available in the form requested.

The proposals in the Government's Green Paper "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnerships in Pensions" are designed to ensure that someone with a full working life, or years covered by credits, will receive a pension on retirement above the Minimum Income Guarantee. The impact of the new State Second pension in 2050, once individuals have experienced a full working lifetime under the new scheme is shown in the table accompanying paragraph 14 of chapter 6 of the Green Paper.

The precise impact of the proposals will, therefore, depend on a variety of factors, including employment records and additional voluntary savings. The proposals in "Partnership in Pensions" will promote behavioural changes through the spread of good value funded second pensions, improved pensions education, and the greater reward in retirement form moving from benefits to work.

Projections forward to the year 2050 are subject to a high degree of uncertainty, given the number of assumptions that need to be made in making these estimates. Some of those who will be pensioners in 2050 have yet to begin work, and most are today in their 20s and 30s.

As an illustration of the possible impact of the behavioural effects of the proposals in "Partnership in Pensions", if all those in work saved an additional 5 per cent., the figure would fall to approximately 2 million in 2050.

Notes:

1. Pensioners are defined as pensioner benefit units at and above State pension age.

2. The figures and proportions given for the Minimum Income Guarantee are of pensioner benefit units (at least one of State pension age or above), rather than individual pensioners.

Contributions Agency

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much is being spent on the new computer system at the Central Office of the Contributions Agency in Newcastle; and when it (a) was originally and (b) is currently expected to be fully operational. [64853]

Mr. Timms: If Andersen Consulting were to process anticipated volumes of the new National Insurance Recording System (NIRS2) the budget for the financial year to 1 April 1999 is expected to be £5.301 million. The base annual service charge for NIRS2 over the next three years is budgeted at £6.850 million per annum. This amount is subject to volumes of work processed and also any charges for agreed enhancements to the system.

The original contract allowed for the delivery of the system over 3 releases between February 1997 and April 1999. A subsequent Deed of Amendment was agreed in July 1996, which allowed for a phased delivery of the first release. NIRS2 Release 1 is expected to be fully operational by April 1999.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what instructions have been given to the Benefits Agency and other related agencies to expedite claims for benefits from victims of Gulf War Syndrome. [64998]

Mr. Timms: Extensive international research has not identified a specific Gulf-related illness.

Claims by Gulf war veterans in respect of Social Security benefits are dealt with by the Benefits Agency in the same way as all other claims.

The War Pensions Agency endeavours to action all claims for war pension (which may be made in respect of any condition believed to be due to any service in the armed forces) as expeditiously as possible. Claims for war pension in respect of Gulf-related illnesses are dealt with by a dedicated section within the War Pensions Agency. A high proportion of Gulf claims are for a number of ill-defined conditions and consideration of these requires extensive medical and other evidence before claims can be determined.

In order to expedite awards, partial decisions are made as an interim measure whilst other inquiries continue, and, where despite these inquiries the diagnosis remains unclear, the World Health Organisation international classification of diseases (ICD 10) "symptoms, signs and ill-defined conditions" is used. Also, medical evidence from any previous attendance at the Ministry of Defence Gulf Veterans' Medical Assessment Programme is used whenever possible as this may reduce the requirement to seek further evidence.

Occupational Pension Schemes

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many, and what proportion of, employers submitting evidence to the Pension Review called for the right to make the membership of occupational pension schemes compulsory. [64937]

Mr. Timms: It is not possible to identify how many of the respondents to the Pensions Review were employers. Of the more than 2,000 submissions to the Pensions Review, 310 commented on compulsion and a small number proposed that membership of occupational schemes should be compulsory. As part of the consultation arising from the Green Paper on Pensions "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions" the Government are seeking views on whether employers should be allowed to require employees to be members of their occupational schemes, subject to a right for employees to opt out in certain circumstances.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to publish the consultation paper on occupational pension changes. [64820]

Mr. Timms: The consultation document, "Strengthening the Pensions Framework", was published on 16 December 1998. Copies were placed in the Library.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the grounds were for his decision not to make membership of occupational pension schemes compulsory for relevant employers. [64936]

Mr. Timms: While we recognise that most employees benefit from membership of occupational schemes, not all employees do so.

We are therefore seeking views on whether we should allow employers to require employees to be members of their occupational schemes, subject to a right for employees to opt-out. We are also seeking views on the conditions which should be satisfied before an opt-out is permitted.

Income Support

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (a) by constituency and (b) by county the number of pensioners that have not taken up their income support entitlement in Wales in the last year for which figures are available. [64657]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the proportion of pensioners who will be dependent on income support in 2050 (a) on present policies and (b) under his proposed pensions policies. [64707]

Mr. Timms: The proposals in the Government's Green Paper "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions" are designed to ensure that someone with a full working life, or years covered by credits, will receive a pension on retirement above the minimum income guarantee. The impact of the new State Second pension in 2050, once individuals have experienced a full working lifetime under the new scheme is shown in the table accompanying paragraph 14 of chapter 6 of the Green Paper.

The precise impact of the proposals will, therefore, depend on a variety of factors, including employment records and additional voluntary savings. The proposals in "Partnership in Pensions" will promote behavioural changes through the spread of good value funded second pensions, improved pensions education, and the greater reward in retirement form moving from benefits to work.

Projections forward to the year 2050 are subject to a high degree of uncertainty, given the number of assumptions that need to be made in making these estimates. Some of those who will be pensioners in 2050 have yet to begin work, and most are today in their 20s and 30s.

Estimates have been made by extrapolating projections from the PENSIM model, but these can only give a broad indication of the likely order of magnitude of figures so far into the future.

On the basis of unchanged policies, estimates suggest that approximately 1 in 3 pensioners in 2050 could rely on Income Support. Even if no behavioural changes are assumed, the new insurance contract for pensions will mean that these estimates are reduced to approximately 1 in 4 pensioners receiving income from the Minimum Income Guarantee in 2050, and a lower proportion in years after 2050.

As an illustration of the possible impact of the behavioural effects of the proposals in "Partnership in Pensions", if all those in work saved an additional 5 per cent., the figure would fall to approximately 1 in 5 in 2050.

Children (Household Profile)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate (a) how many children are living in households which have below half average income and (b) how many children live in households headed by (i) a married couple, (ii) a cohabiting couple and (iii) a lone parent; and if he will break down the figures between (A) two working parents, (B) one working parent and (C) no working parent families. [64673]

Angela Eagle [pursuant to her reply, 17 December 1998, c. 718]: The information is in the tables.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

New Forest Fox Hounds

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what authority the Parliamentary Secretary instructed Forest Enterprise to issue a formal warning to the New Forest Fox Hounds on 6 November. [65007]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 11 January 1999]: Forest Enterprise issued this warning to the New Forest Fox Hounds as a result of a breach of the conditions of their licence. Forest Enterprise will take appropriate action, which may include suspension of the licence, if there are further breaches of the licence conditions. The New Forest Fox Hounds have accepted this. The licence is enforced by Forest Enterprise and I have not at any time instructed Forest Enterprise, or the Forestry Commissioners, to issue a formal warning to the New Forest Fox Hounds. I expect Forest Enterprise to enforce all conditions and they have my full support in doing so.

Basking Sharks

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to increase protection for the basking shark through the Common Fisheries Policy; and if he will make a statement. [65272]

Mr. Morley: Following pressure from the United Kingdom, new EC fisheries technical conservation rules coming into force on 1 January 2000 will ban the sale or offering for sale of marine species such as basking sharks caught using a harpoon or other projectile. From the same date, EC fishermen will be required to make logbook entries for all species caught in excess of 50kg. This should allow for the accurate monitoring of any accidental bycatches of basking sharks.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Qatar about the raid on Iraq. [65376]

Mr. Fatchett: We have kept in regular contact with the Qatari Government on Iraq. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister sent a message to the Amir about the outcome of military action. I telephoned the Qatari Foreign Minister at the start of Operation Desert Fox. Her Majesty's Ambassador in Doha made several calls on the Qatari Foreign Minister and wrote to the Prime Minister, Foreign Minister, Chief of Staff and other senior figures on the effectiveness of military action.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries from which Her Majesty's Government have received letters or messages of protest concerning the bombing of Iraq. [65280]

Mr. Fatchett: Operation Desert Fox gathered considerable international support and understanding. Some have criticised our action. Messages and letters received by HMG reflect a wide spectrum of views.

Visas (Students)

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many prospective students on FCO scholarships or sponsorships were denied visas to visit the UK in the most recent year for which figures are available. [65278]

Mr. Fatchett: These figures are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Terence Arthur Indge

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the case of Terence Arthur Indge concerning a road traffic accident in Abu Dhabi in 1991; and if he will make a statement. [65162]

Mr. Fatchett: Since 1991, this Department has received representations from Mrs. Indge about her husband's case, and from the right hon. and learned Member.

Faroe Islands

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of the Faroe Islands over its whaling policy; and if he will make a statement. [64838]

Mr. Fatchett: Denmark is responsible for the whaling policy of the Faroe Islands. While I have made no representations to Denmark, we have made plain the widespread public concern about the humane treatment of all cetaceans. We will ensure that this issue is addressed at the next meeting of the International Whaling Commission (IWC) to be held in Grenada in May.

Edgar Fernandes

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date the British Ambassador to Turkey wrote to the Maltese Government in respect of the extradition proceedings relating to the murder of Edgar Fernandes. [65105]

Mr. Fatchett: The British Ambassador in Ankara has not written to the Maltese Government in respect of the case of Edgar Fernandes. As my previous answers on 29 October 1998, Official Report, column 271 and 10 December 1998, Official Report, column 281 show, our staff in Valletta are in regular contact with the Maltese Government in respect of the extradition proceedings.

My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State last raised the matter with the Turkish Ambassador to London on 7 January.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government have taken to ensure that the Maltese Government are acting expeditiously in respect of extradition proceedings relating to the murder of Edgar Fernandes. [65106]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer my hon. Friend to my answers of 29 October 1998, Official Report, column 271 and 10 December 1998, Official Report, column 281. Our staff in Valletta continue to take every opportunity to remind the Maltese Government of our interest in the extradition of Mr. Mohammed Abdal Monem Abbas Aly. The Vice-Consul in Valletta regularly speaks to the Police and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. He last called on the Maltese Assistant Attorney General to discuss the case on 7 January.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions there have been and on what date between the British Ambassador to Malta and the Maltese Government on extradition proceedings relating to the murder of Edgar Fernandes. [65159]

Mr. Fatchett: The British High Commissioner in Valletta formally discussed the extradition proceedings with the Attorney General and the Permanent Secretary at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs on 7 October 1998. He has since seen members of the Maltese Government on many occasions and consistently takes the opportunity of reminding them of our interests in the extradition of Mr. Mohammed Abdal Monem Abbas Aly to Turkey.

CABINET OFFICE

Annual Report

12. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will publish in the Government's annual report for 1998–99 an independent assessment of the progress of the Government in meeting each of the 1997 manifesto commitments. [63730]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The 1998 Annual Report of the Government included independent comments from members of the public on the Government's performance, though not on each and every one of the 177 manifesto commitments. Instead, all the commitments were subject to a full, factual assessment, prepared by civil servants. We expect that the 1999 Annual Report will be prepared in the same way.

Better Government Initiative

15. Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when he expects to publish the better government White Paper. [63734]

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what further measures are planned to advance the better government agenda. [63733]

Mr. Kilfoyle: As my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office explained to the House on 21 October 1998, Official Report, columns 1267–68, the Government will publish a White Paper in the Spring, setting out their programme for modernising government and joining-up public services to respond better to the people who need them. We are keen to take account of as wide a range of views and ideas as possible in preparing the White Paper. That is why he recently launched a Modernising Government discussion forum on the Downing Street web-site, to allow more people to give us their views on the Government's vision for our public services. The Invest to Save Budget, which provides funding for public sector bodies to implement joint working and better co-ordination of service delivery, is another example of the Government's commitment to the Modernising Government programme.

Duchy of Lancaster

16. Mr. Stott: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on his duties in relation to the Duchy of Lancaster. [63735]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: As Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, I administer the Duchy on behalf of Her Majesty The Queen. My responsibilities include the administration of the Duchy's estates, finances, the appointment of magistrates in the Duchy area, appointments to Church Livings and several appointments in connection with the Duchy's historic duties.

Media Contact

17. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how frequently he meets the media to discuss aspects of the Government's business. [63736]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The role of the Minister for the Cabinet Office requires that the Government message is communicated at every opportunity. This means that I frequently accept broadcast interview requests from national and regional media outlets on a wide range of subjects connected with Government business.

I also brief media either individually by means of interviews or articles for publication and when appropriate hold press conferences to make announcements directly connected to the work of the Cabinet Office.

Anti-drugs Strategy

18. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the progress of the Government's anti-drugs strategy. [63737]

20. Helen Jones: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the progress of the Government's anti-drugs strategy. [63739]

22. Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the progress being made in implementing the Government's anti-drugs strategy. [63741]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: I refer my hon. Friends to my answer earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew), Official Report, columns 289.

Public Information Campaigns

19. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement about the Government's policy regarding the use of public money for public information campaigns. [63738]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Government has a duty to inform both Parliament and the public about its policies, decisions and actions, in accordance with the long-standing conventions followed by successive administrations. The conventions require that Government information activities "should be conducted in an economic and appropriate way, having regard to the need to be able to justify the costs as expenditure of public funds".

Invest to Save Programme

21. Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the Invest to Save programme. [63740]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: This morning my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury and I announced £120 million of new funding for 33 projects promoting greater responsiveness and efficiency in the delivery of public services. This funding is being provided from the Invest to Save Budget which was set up by the Treasury following the Comprehensive Spending Review.

The projects we announced today are practical examples of what we mean by modernising public services. They demonstrate how our drive for innovative, joined-up and locally responsive government will make life easier for people using public services.

Policy Co-ordination

23. Mr. Ivan Lewis: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on progress in improving the mechanisms for co-ordination between Government Departments. [63743]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Good progress is being made. The following initiatives are helping to improve co-ordination between Government Departments:

- the role of my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office is to advise and assist ministerial colleagues in the effective co-ordination and presentation of Government policy;
- the restructured and strengthened Cabinet Office is helping to bring Departments together to formulate policy collectively and to drive forward cross-Departmental issues; and
- a number of cross-cutting Units have been established to tackle some of the difficult issues which cross conventional Departmental boundaries.

We plan to publish a White Paper in the Spring setting out our programme for modernising government and joining up public services to respond better to the people who need them.

Duchy of Lancaster (Assets)

24. Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what investment the Duchy of Lancaster has made in its land and other assets in the last 12 months. [63744]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Duchy of Lancaster has, in the twelve month period to the 30 September 1998, invested £185,600 in improvements to its properties and has acquired property to the value of £3,265,600. In addition, the Duchy has allocated £2,410,500 for the purchase of portfolio investments. The total investment made has therefore been £5,861,700.

Duchy of Lancaster (Magistrates)

25. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the appointment of magistrates in the Duchy of Lancaster. [63746]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: I appoint magistrates in Lancashire, Greater Manchester and Merseyside in accordance with the Justices of the Peace Act 1997. I am assisted in this task by a number of Advisory Committees and Sub-Committees who are responsible for recruiting, interviewing and recommending suitable people to me for appointment as magistrates. Committees work to a set of Directions similar to those used by the Lord Chancellor's Advisory Committees in the remainder of England and Wales.

Information Warfare

26. Mrs. Lait: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what progress is being made in developing a dialogue with relevant private sector organisations on the issues of defensive information warfare. [63747]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Government attach great importance to the protection of key IT systems in Government and the private sector. As my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence indicated in the information warfare Adjournment Debate on 4 November 1998, Official Report, columns 987–92, the Government hope to announce shortly new initiatives to enhance the defence of the critical national infrastructure from the risk, of a disabling electronic attack. A well-established partnership already exists with key private sector players as part of the long-standing arrangements for protection against threats such as terrorism and this provides a strong foundation for further development of dialogue and appropriate protective measures, to defend against information Warfare.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Planning Applications

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many planning applications have been submitted in the past year for major developments with particular reference to shopping complexes in the Newtownbreda Purdysburn and Saintfield Road area of South Belfast. [65108]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Planning Service under its Chief Executive, Mr. T. W. Stewart. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from T. W. Stewart to Rev. Martin Smyth, dated 14 January 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent question about planning applications for major developments with particular reference to shopping complexes in the Newtownbreda, Purdysburn and Saintfield Road areas of South Belfast.

During the period January—December 1998, the Planning Service received two such major applications. One is for the development of a Class 1 foodstore and petrol filling station on lands at 170 Newtownbreda Road, Newtownbreda. The other is for a site for a retail unit, petrol filling station and park and ride facility at the junction of new Link Road, adjacent to Beechhill Road and Saintfield Road, Castlereagh. Both applications have been designated under the Article 31 procedures of the Planning (NI) Order 1991 and are at an early consideration stage. Retail and Traffic Impact Assessments have been received on both applications. No decision has yet been made on the need for a Public Inquiry to be held.

You will be interested to know that the Planning Service is also considering a Crown Development submission from the Roads Service for a park and ride scheme to include car park, terminal building and small scale retail at Saintfield Road, Purdysburn Road, Castlereagh.

I do hope this is helpful.

Conspiracy

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have been (a) arrested, (b) charged and (c) convicted of conspiracy in the UK to commit offences abroad. [64207]

Mr. Ingram: The information requested is not available, as the police and Court databases do not currently record arrests, charges or convictions against the heading "conspiracy in the UK to commit offences abroad".

Local Government Finance

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to provide data on Northern Ireland Government and local authority accounts consistent with the National Accounting Convention. [63972]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 16 December 1998]: Government departments in Northern Ireland produce annual accounts in accordance with guidance issued by the Department of Finance and Personnel—this guidance is based on that issued by HM Treasury to GB departments. Similarly, Northern Ireland district councils produce accounts which are broadly in line with those produced by local authorities in Great Britain

SCOTLAND

Scottish Enterprise

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the Chairman of Scottish Enterprise to discuss strategy. [66005]

Mr. Dewar: My noble Friend Lord Macdonald, the Minister with responsibility for business and industry, last met Sir Ian Wood, Chairman of Scottish Enterprise, to discuss the Scottish Enterprise strategy on 4 December 1998. At my request Scottish Enterprise has been reviewing its strategy over the last year. This process has involved extensive public consultation. The new strategy will be launched today. I have placed copies in the House of Commons Library.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total expenditure and the breakdown of expenditure in his Department since May 1997 on (a) public opinion research, (b) television, radio and newspaper advertising and (c) direct mail. [63915]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 11 January 1999]: Expenditure on public opinion research undertaken by my Department since May 1997 was £43,000. Expenditure on information campaigns totalled £2,439,000 of which £1,130,000 was spent on television, £598,000 on radio and £711,000 on Press. Direct mail amounted to £22,000.

Hospital Treatment (Island Residents)

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial support is available to Scottish island residents travelling to mainland hospitals for specialist treatment and advice. [65275]

Mr. Galbraith: The Highlands and Islands Patients Travelling Expenses Scheme provides for the reimbursement of travelling expenses in excess of a contribution, currently £8.00, for patients attending hospital, where the distance travelled from the patient's home (or place of residence) to the hospital is 30 miles or more, or involves a journey by sea of more than 5 miles.

Salmon Fisheries

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to receive the report of the Task Force appointed to review the arrangements surrounding protection orders issued under the Freshwater and Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act 1976; and if he will make a statement. [66316]

Mr. Macdonald: Copies of the report have been placed in the Library. It will also be available on the Scottish Office website.

I am grateful to the Task Force for their deliberations. They have made a number of recommendations for improving the transparency of the application process and for enhancing the operation and monitoring of Protection Orders approved. These recommendations have been incorporated in the revised guidance and application forms.

Dounreay

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the timescale for the clean-up of the area within two kilometres of the outfall pipe of UKAEA Dounreay; what action has been taken by UKAEA to identify the source of the escaped irradiated nuclear fuel fragments; what action has been taken by UKAEA to clear Sandside beach of all such fragments; when the fishing restriction in this area will next be reviewed by SEPA; what is the nature of SEPA's monitoring of the specified area; what monitoring is carried out on the land and sea adjacent to the specified area; and what scientific advice he has been given, and from whom, regarding the risk to humans on Sandside beach from direct contact with radioactive particles from UKAEA Dounreay. [65051]

Mr. Macdonald: The timescale for clean-up operations can only be considered when survey work has been completed and properly assessed.

The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (UKAEA) has undertaken a substantial programme of work to determine the source and extent of particles on the seabed adjacent to the Dounreay site. The study takes advantage of state-of-the-art diving and other monitoring technology. The results of this study are expected to be published shortly. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry will then consider possible courses of action.

Since 1983 three particles have been found in Sandside Bay and removed. UKAEA currently monitors the strandline at Sandside Bay weekly, and nearby public beaches twice yearly or following storm activity. UKAEA undertakes such remedial action as is necessary in line with the requirements of the regulators to ensure public safety.

The Scottish Environment Protection Agency (SEPA) will review the fishing restrictions when more complete information is available on the contamination of the seabed and local marine environment or if new information relating to offshore contamination comes to light.

SEPA undertakes monitoring of seafood (collected on a quarterly basis) from within the restricted area and the results are provided to the Scottish Office as well as being published annually. No fragments of irradiated nuclear fuel have been detected in the samples taken from the area.

UKAEA also carries out monitoring of seafood from within the restricted area and further afield. In addition to monitoring nearby public beaches, UKAEA currently monitors the foreshore at Dounreay fortnightly.

The National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) supplied scientific advice on the risks to human health from encountering fragments of irradiated nuclear fuel. That advice was contained in the report "Fragments of Irradiated Nuclear Fuel in the Dounreay Local Environment" submitted by SEPA to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, a copy of which was placed in the House of Commons Library following a parliamentary question answered on 15 December 1998, Official Report, column 418, number 64389. The report includes an assessment of the risk to Sandside Bay bait collectors, the group likely to spend more time in contact with the sediment than most other users. NRPB considered the probability of the bait collectors encountering a fuel fragment to be a round 1 in 200,000. The views of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation int he Environment (COMARE) were taken into account by the NRPB.

Organic Aid Scheme

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what resources he is providing for the Organic Aid Scheme in Scotland in the current financial year. [65647]

Mr. Macdonald: I expect expenditure on the Organic Aid Scheme in Scotland to be about £0.24m in 1998–99. This will represent a rise of 64 per cent. over expenditure in 1997–98.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ensure that, in making arrangements for dealing with asylum seekers, his Department holds discussions with organisations expert in the provision of (a) social welfare, (b) housing and (c) legal advice to (i) Vietnamese boat people and (ii) Bosnian refugees. [65254]

Mr. Dewar: The new arrangements for dealing with asylum seekers will apply to the United Kingdom so that they are treated equally across to whole country. Responsibility for these matters rests with the Home Office which is consulting extensively about the arrangements for the future, including with those organisations expert in the areas mentioned.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, in the implementation of the proposals in the Asylum Seekers White Paper, he will ensure the retention of the partnership arrangements between the Scottish Office, COSLA and local authorities for supporting asylum-seekers while their applications are being considered. [65116]

Mr. Dewar: The new asylum support system proposed in the White Paper will be administered by an Asylum Support Directorate in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate in the Home Office. My Department and the Home Office are currently considering what arrangements should apply when the asylum seekers are placed in Scotland.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the Home Office regarding the proposals in the White Paper on Asylum Seekers to disperse asylum seekers outside London. [65117]

Mr. Dewar: I was fully involved in collective consideration of the White Paper, as were other ministerial colleagues. My officials are in regular contact with officials in the Home Office as the details of the support scheme—including arrangements for dispersal of asylum seekers—are developed.

Agricultural Business Improvement Scheme

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to issue revised details and guidelines in respect of the Agricultural Business Improvement Scheme; and if he will make a statement. [65644]

Mr. Macdonald: An announcement will be made in March about a range of improvements being introduced to the Objective 1 Agricultural Business Improvement Scheme.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the hospitals in Scotland which have acute beds and in each case the number of (a) intensive care beds, (b) high dependency beds and (c) other acute beds. [65082]

Mr. Galbraith: Information on the numbers of intensive care and other acute beds is shown in the table. Separate numbers for high dependency beds are not collected and such beds are therefore included in the figures shown for other acute beds.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Standing Committee on Regional Affairs

Miss Melanie Johnson: To ask the President of the Council what plans she has for the Standing Committee on Regional Affairs. [65972]

Mrs. Beckett: The Government have been considering the means of improving the way in which Parliament can debate the affairs of the English regions. I shall shortly be submitting a memorandum to the Modernisation Committee inviting it to examine the possibility of reviving and adapting the Standing Committee on Regional Affairs already allowed for under the Standing Orders of the House.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Cotter: To ask the President of the Council on what dates (a) the Ministerial Group on the Millennium Date Change (MISC4) and (b) the Sub-Group (MISC4(P)) have met; and what meetings are planned for the future. [64822]

Mrs. Beckett: Details relating to the meetings of Cabinet Committees are not normally made public. This is in line with the practice of successive Administrations.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Emissions

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what contribution he expects the electricity generation sector to make towards reducing CO_2 emissions by 2010, other than the reductions resulting from use of new CHP plant. [65333]

Mr. Meale: The Government intend to develop a balanced and equitable strategy across all sectors to meet the UK's international and domestic climate change targets. As a first step, on 26 October 1998, the Government published a consultation paper describing progress to date in reducing greenhouse gas emissions in the UK and setting out a variety of policy options for further action. The consultation paper refers to a number of options which could be taken in the electricity generation sector to reduce carbon dioxide emissions including increased use of CHP, increased use of renewable energy, improvements in energy efficiency, implementation of Integrated Pollution Prevention and Control (IPPC) regulation and improved utility regulation.

Driving Tests

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the income was from practical driving tests in (a) 1990 to

30 June 1996, (b) 1 July 1996 to 31 December 1996 and (c) 1 January 1997 to date; and what it has been for theory tests since 1 July 1996. [65345]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The figures requested are as follows:

£ million

Period	Practical Test Fee Income
1 April 1990—30 June 1996	298.8
1 July 1996—31 December 1996	32.8
1 January 1997—30 November 1998	86.5

Figures for November 1998 are the latest currently available.

The income from theory test fees from 1 July 1996 to 30 November 1998 was £48.6m.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many practical driving tests were conducted in the periods (a) 1990 to 30 June 1996, (b) 1 July 1996 to 31 December 1996 and (c) 1 January 1997 to date; and what percentages were (i) passes and (ii) failures in each period. [65339]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The figures my hon. Friend requested are shown in the table.

Period	Tests conducted	Tests passed	Pass rate (per cent.)	Failure rate (per cent.)
1 January 1990–30 June 1996	10,257,744	5,019,145	48.93	51.07
1 July 1996–31 December 1996	855,037	381,263	44.59	55.41
1 January 1997–30 November 1998[1]	2,038,122	950,479	46.64	53.36

[1] Figures for November 1998 are the latest currently available

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what effect the closure of driving test centres has had on waiting times for driving test appointments. [65343]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Test centre closures have not affected average waiting times for driving test appointments as the overall capacity to conduct tests has not been affected. The driving examiners from the closed centres have been re-deployed to adjoining centres.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people who have taken the theory test and passed have not applied to take a practical driving test; and what steps the DSA has taken to ensure that those who have passed the theory test apply for a practical driving test within two years. [65341]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We estimate that there are around 300,000 people who have passed the theory test but do not currently have an appointment for a practical test.

Theory test pass certificates have always shown the date of test pass and stated that the certificate has a two year life. The expiry date on certificates have been given greater prominence since August 1998. The Driving Standards Agency has been sending reminder letters on a quarterly basis to theory test pass holders since last spring. reminders were sent in April to 80,000 people whose theory test pass certificates were over 14 months old, and shortly afterwards to 5,000 people whose certificates were 10 to 13 months old. the Agency has since written in August and November to everybody holding a certificate then over 14 months. The Agency will continue to issue reminder letters until all extant certificates are those carrying a prominent expiry date.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans the DSA has to reduce the period within which candidates who have passed a theory test are expected to take a practical test. [65344]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Theory test pass certificates are valid for two years. This provides an ample period for a successful theory test candidate to prepare for the practical driving test. We have no current proposals to reduce that period, but will keep the matter under review.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what reductions in examiner staffing levels have occurred following driving test centre closures; what effect future closures will have on examiner staffing levels; and if redundancies are planned. [65362]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No driving examiner redundancies have occurred as a result of test centre closures. Staff were transferred to adjoining test centres to cover the expected increase in demand there. No redundancies are planned, in fact the Driving Standards Agency plans to recruit 85 new examiners during this year.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what service improvements have resulted from savings acquired from the closure of driving test centres; and what future improvements are anticipated. [65357]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Restructuring the test centre estate has helped the Driving Standards Agency to provide a fair and consistent standard of test. Savings have helped fund improvements to the remainder of the estate and to administrative systems, including the new driving test booking system that becomes operational later this year. There has been a series of improvements in customer service targets and new customer service features introduced. These were recognised by the Charter Mark award last year. Savings from future closures will be used to help pay for service improvements in the same way.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out the consultative process used by the Driving Standards Agency in areas affected by the closures of driving test centres. [65358]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Driving Standards Agency normally consults interested parties locally, such as the Member of Parliament, the local authority and instructors when considering whether to close a driving test centre. A public consultation meeting is usually held, and all the results of the consultation process are considered before a final decision is taken.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the current waiting times for driving test appointments in each region. [65361]

Ms Glenda Jackson: At 8 January 1999, the average waiting time for a practical car driving test in each of the Driving Standards Agency's operational areas was:

London & South East: 6.28 weeks

Midlands & Eastern: 4.16 weeks

Wales & Western: 3.63 weeks

Northern: 5.19 weeks

Scotland: 4.81 weeks.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps will be taken by the Driving Standards Agency to monitor demand in areas where test centre closures have occurred. [65353]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Following closure of a driving test centre, we monitor the pattern of demand at adjoining centres to ensure it is in line with forecasts. Should demand at these centres give cause for concern, steps are taken to ensure that additional examiners are allocated.

Ms Glenda Jackson: We do not have a planned list of driving test centre closures over the next five years. We regularly review requirements against demand for driving tests, operational suitability, and the need to provide accommodation that offers a safe working environment for examiners and candidates at a reasonable cost. Should a centre fall short of these criteria its continued viability is considered, each case being considered on its merits with due regard to local factors.

We are currently consulting about the future of the following car driving test centres: Didsbury (Manchester); Washwood Heath (Birmingham); Newport (Monmouthshire); Minehead (Somerset); and Holyhead Road (Coventry).

Consultation has also been completed about the proposed closure of the following centres, but no final decisions have yet been reached: Hartlepool, Rochdale, Cheltenham, Oswestry (Shropshire), Sevenoaks, and Tunbridge Wells, and the Ore (Hastings) lorry and bus driving test centre.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many driving theory tests have been conducted since 1 July 1996, and how many and what percentage of these were (a) passes and (b) failures. [65340]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The figures requested are given in the tables. For cars and motorcycles they are shown separately for the periods 1 July 1996—30 September 1996 and 1 October 1996—30 November 1998 to reflect the change in the pass mark:

	1 July 1996 to 30 September 1996 Pass mark 26/35		1 October 1996 to 30 November 1998 Pass mark 30/35
	Car	Motorcycle	Car	Motorcycle
Passed	310,765	2,022	1,596,315	13,276
Percentage pass	85.5	92.1	62.9	55.9
Failed	52,823	173	943,718	10,478
Percentage fail	14.5	7.9	37.1	44.1

The lorry and bus theory tests were introduced on 1 January 1997, the figures requested in respect of these tests are as follows:

	1 January 1997 to 30 November 1998 Pass mark 21/25
	LGV	PCV
Passed	42,005	15,990
Percentage pass	88.4	87.8
Failed	5,496	2,215
Percentage fail	11.6	12.2

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what effect the proposed extended driving test will have on waiting times for customers. [65363]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There may be a surge in demand ahead of the new, longer test which could increase waiting times by one to two weeks above the target for the next three months. The Driving Standards Agency will seek to minimise the effects of any surge by ensuring that additional examiners are deployed where necessary.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research is being carried out to identify reasons for falls in demand for theory and practical driving tests; and what results are available. [65365]

Ms Glenda Jackson: When in April 1998 the Driving Standards Agency wrote reminder letters to 85,000 theory test pass certificate holders, around 10,000 were asked why they had not completed the test process. About 1,700 responded. The majority had attempted the practical test and had failed but intended to keep trying. Nearly a quarter had delayed learning for financial or health reasons.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many driving test centres have been closed since the inception of the Driving Standards Agency; in what parts of the country such closures have occurred; and what reasons for closure were given in each case. [65359]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Since the launch of the Driving Standards Agency in April 1990, 61 driving test centres have been closed without direct replacement in the immediate vicinity, in the following areas:

	Number
London & South East	11
Midlands & Eastern	15
Wales & Western	14
Northern	12
Total	61

In addition, Edinburgh (Newington) and Wealdstone (North London) have been agreed for closure later this month.

Closures were caused by routes becoming operationally unsuitable, the expiry of property leases, a rationalisation of centres in the area, for health and safety reasons, or on the grounds of operational costs. The effort involved in documenting the reason, or reasons, for each closure would be disproportionate.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reasons the books on the theory driving test were produced in quick succession; and what steps were taken by the DSA to defray the costs of those customers who bought faulty material. [65372]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The question bank for each type of theory test is revised annually to reflect changes in legislation and other developments. The Driving Standards Agency publishes books containing the question banks before the adoption of new questions so that candidates can prepare for their test.

The edition of the car and motorcycle theory test book published in June 1998 contained a number of errors. A revised edition was issued in August 1998. Candidates who had purchased the June edition were not disadvantaged. Test papers containing questions where a candidate may have been misled by the June edition were withdrawn. Where such questions appeared in test papers before they were withdrawn, incorrect answers were ignored in the marking. Amendment slips were inserted in all unsold copies of that edition, and sent to theory test candidates with their appointment letter.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what increases in the cost of the driving test are being proposed. [65364]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The fee for driving theory test appointments made from 6 April 1999 will be £15.50, an increase of 50 pence on the current fee.

The fees for practical driving tests taken from 4 May 1999 will be as follows:

Category of test	Proposed new fee	Current fee	Increase
Weekday Tests
Car	36.75	32.75	4.00
Motorcycle	45.00	39.00	6.00
Saturday/Weekday Evening Tests
Car	46.00	43.00	3.00
Motorcycle	55.00	52.00	3.00

The fees for minor categories, such as tractor driving tests, will remain the same as for car tests. Moped tests will be charged the same as motorcycle tests. The fees for lorry and bus tests will remain unaltered at £73.50 for weekday tests and £92.00 for Saturday and weekday evening tests.

Driving Instructors

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the purpose is of check tests of approved driving instructors; and what effect such tests have had on pass rates since their introduction. [65367]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The check test was introduced in the early 1970s to allow the Department to test an Approved Driving Instructor's continued ability and fitness to give instruction, in the interest of both road safety and consumer protection. It allows the supervising examiner to identify any weaknesses in an instructor's tuition and offer constructive criticism on how he or she might improve their teaching methods.

Although the pass rates for the practical driving test are the same today as they were at the time the check test was introduced its introduction saw a levelling out of a falling pass rate that had gone from 50 per cent. in 1950 to 51 per cent. in 1960 and to 46 per cent. in the early 1970s. The current pass rate is 48 per cent.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many approved driving instructors left the register in the periods (a) 1990 to 30 June 1996, (b) 1 July 1996 to 31 December 1996 and (c) 1 January 1997 to date. [65346]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The number of instructors who left the register during the specified periods were:

Date	Instructors
1 January 1990 to 30 June 1996	17,715
1 July 1996 to 31 December 1996	1,469
1 January 1997 to 30 November 1998[1]	7,086

[1] Figures for November 1998 are the latest currently available

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many approved driving instructors have ceased to practise but whose licences still have a period to run in the periods (a) 1990 to 30 June 1996, (b) 1 July 1996 to 31 December 1996 and (c) 1 January 1997 to date. [65348]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information requested is not available. We do not know how many of the instructors whose names appear on the register at any given date are not currently practising.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many approved driving instructors have been removed from the register since check testing was introduced. [65349]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Since April 1995, 247 instructors have been removed from the register for failing the check test. Statistics for removal for check test failure are not available for the period prior to that date.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if it is the Driving Standards Agency's intention to use the proposed log book as a means of regulating the teaching methods of approved driving instructors. [65366]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We see merit in introducing a training logbook for learner drivers. This will be introduced on a voluntary basis in the spring. A logbook will provide instructors and their pupils, and others who supervise learners, such as parents, with a syllabus and encourage them to adopt a structured and progressive approach to driver training. The syllabus, which has been developed in consultation with the driving instruction industry, will enable progress to be charted. The logbook identifies the areas that need to be taught. It does not define the teaching methods to be adopted when covering each topic.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many complaints about the check test have been received by the DSA since the test was introduced, broken down by (a) test centre and (b) the nature of the complaint; and what steps the DSA has taken in response to such complaints. [65373]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Driving Standards Agency does not keep consolidated statistics about the numbers of check test complaints it receives, analysed by test centre or the nature of the complaint. Any complaint from an instructor about a check test would be carefully considered.

Cycling

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions by what means he plans to deliver his target of quadrupling cycling by 2012; and if he will make a statement. [65679]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The target of quadrupling the number of trips by bicycle (on 1996 figures) by the end of 2012, was established by the National Cycling Strategy (NCS). In the White Paper "A New Deal for Transport" published last year, we endorsed that target and recognised the positive contribution that cycling can make towards a transport system that is safe, efficient, clean and fair. The Department requires local authorities as part of their local transport plans to establish local cycling strategies which will contribute to the target of increased cycle use. We will continue to offer guidance to authorities on policy and technical issues, and to work in partnership with other organisations in achieving the NCS objectives.

Telecommunications Masts

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to issue supplementary guidance to planning guidance on telecommunications masts under PPG(8). [65616]

Mr. Raynsford: In July 1998, we published for public comment our proposals for changes to the control of development by licensed telecommunications code system operators under the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995 (GPDO). In November, we announced the outcome of this consultation, and, in particular, our intention to proceed with a new single-stage "prior approval" procedure of 42 days for ground-based masts. The Department is currently preparing the necessary GPDO amendment Order and guidance to implement the changes and will consult on drafts shortly.

A404(M) (Noise Amelioration)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to be able to announce his decision on the funding of noise amelioration measures on the A404(M) following the recommendation of the independent report commissioned by the Highways Agency. [65615]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In our White Paper "A New Deal For Trunk Roads" we announced that we intended to set aside budget for the purpose of providing noise mitigation measures for some of the most serious and pressing cases along existing roads. We also said that we would make a separate announcement regarding the criteria to be used. These criteria are still being finalised and we will make a statement setting them down as soon as we can. It is important that the selection criteria we choose are as fair as possible. Decisions on individual cases such as the A404(M) must wait until those criteria are published.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he has taken to ensure that United Kingdom passenger aircraft are millennium compliant. [65084]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department has notified all major UK airlines of the need to consider whether their systems will be millennium compliant and advised them to take any remedial action necessary. We are also in close and regular contact with the Civil Aviation Authority (including National Air Traffic Services) who are considering the problem in their role as safety regulator. As part of this process, the CAA are seeking to confirm compliance status of the 2,000 organisations (including UK airlines) which they currently approve. The situation has been and will continue to be monitored on a regular basis. Once the industry has completed their compliance programmes later this year, we will be asking the Chairman of the CAA to provide the Department with appropriate assurances as to the state of readiness of the UK aviation industry. If the CAA have any safety doubts arising from millennium compliance problems, operating authorisations will be withdrawn or withheld.

Air Traffic Services

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the report by Credit Suisse on the proposed public/private partnership for national air traffic services and assess its implications for the private finance initiative contract for the new Scottish centre. [65418]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government have retained Credit Suisse First Boston (CSFB) to provide investment banking advice in developing proposals for a public private partnership for National Air Traffic Services Ltd. (NATS). The advice produced by CSFB is commercially sensitive and is provided to the Government in confidence as part of the policy development process for the NATS PPP. As such, it would not be appropriate to publish it.

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the International Civil Aviation Organisation has agreed that the UK Government will continue to provide air traffic services for the Northern Atlantic operation in the event of a public/private partnership for national air traffic services. [65419]

Ms Glenda Jackson: As my right hon. Friend, the Minister of Transport explained in his answer of 18 November 1998, Official Report, column 676, we are consulting ICAO on our proposals for National Air Traffic Services Ltd.

Highway Works (Compensation)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discretion the Highways Agency has to compensate individual organisations for loss of trade as a result of highway works. [65270]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Where works have been properly carried out by a highway authority under a statutory power, there is no legal liability to compensate for loss of trade. Only in extraordinary circumstances would the Highways Agency consider a discretionary or ex-gratia payment. Where works are carried out on land which has been compulsorily purchased, there may, in certain circumstances, be compensation for injurious affection but not for loss of trade.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid (Funding Code)

Jacqui Smith: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department when the legal aid board will publish its consultation document on the proposed funding code. [66360]

Mr. Hoon: The consultation document, "The Funding Code—a new approach to funding civil cases", will be published tomorrow. Copies will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Consultees have until 30 April 1999 to respond.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Industrial Tribunal Claims

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many applications to industrial tribunals in respect of pensions claims have been abandoned since 1994 because the claimant has died. [64233]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Employment Tribunals Service does not record the reasons why cases are withdrawn and cannot therefore provide any information on the number of pension claims that have been abandoned because the claimant has died.

Home Shopping

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from the home shopping industry in relation to consumer credit agreements; and if he will make a statement. [65306]

Dr. Howells: I have received a number of representations from the home shopping industry, both independently and in response to the question posed in a consultation paper the Department issued last year on whether the legislation should be changed to make unsigned consumer credit agreements for mail order sales enforceable.

I have carefully considered the evidence which all consultees representing many interests put to the Department. I have decided not to make unsigned agreements enforceable since I have been given clear evidence that some consumers are suffering detriment from the practices adopted by some mail order firms. In addition to signing nothing, some consumers are not receiving copies of mail order credit agreements. This leads to confusion about the debt owed and the terms and conditions on which the credit has been provided, which can also reflect unfairly on credit worthiness. I am concerned that some mail order companies may not be satisfying the requirements of the European Consumer Credit Directive and the Distance Selling Directive on giving written information to consumers.

Social Chapter

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the consequences of the introduction of Social Chapter legislation for employment in the UK; and if he will make a statement. [64054]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Ruislip-Northwood (Mr. Wilkinson) on 12 December 1997, Official Report, columns 725–26.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what guidelines have been issued to the manufacturing and retail industries regarding the millennium bug; what steps have been taken to ensure that new products are millennium compliant and are labelled as such; and if he will make a statement. [65085]

Mr. Wills: Information on the Millennium Bug and guidance on how to deal with it is available to businesses from Action 2000. My Department set up Action 2000 last year to lead the work on behalf of the Government in raising awareness of the private sector of the need to take action and to provide help to companies.

Under the Sale of Goods Act 1979, goods sold by traders must among other things "correspond with description" as to fitness for purpose and satisfactory quality. The description of the goods includes any information given about them, by the seller directly or by any other means. Controls already exist to prevent new products being falsely described or labelled as millennium compliant. The Trade Descriptions Act 1968 makes it a criminal offence to apply false or misleading statements to products.

Energy Investment

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what sums of money have been invested by the Government since May 1997 in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom as a whole, into (i) the nuclear industry, (ii) the coal industry, (iii) the oil and gas industries and (iv) the renewable energy industry, in each case including funds for research and development. [65083]

Mr. Battle: Most of my Department's programme expenditure is in support of national objectives, with expenditure not separately identified for Scotland. Exceptions are DRAWMOPS (decommissioning of nuclear facilities) and nuclear safeguards R&D (although the latter is spent in the UK, its objectives are to provide services for the International Atomic Energy Agency). Between May 1997 and December 1998, programme expenditure in the categories mentioned was as follows (in £ million, includes estimates for Q4 1998):

	Scotland	UK
Nuclear
Fusion	—	23.78
DRAWMOPS	127.94	255.88
Safeguards	0.14	2.05
Coal
Clean coal combustion[1]	—	4.42
Oil and Gas
Offshore environmental programme	—	0.14
Hydrocarbon Additional Recovery programme	—	5.30
Renewables[2]	—	15.70

[1] Other clean coal technology related projects are being supported via the Foresight Challenge competition and the Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council.

[2] Support for renewables research via the Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council was £4.04 million between May 1997 and December 1998.

HEALTH

Emissions (Mortality and Morbidity Rates)

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the effect on mortality and morbidity rates which would result from annual reductions in emissions of (i) 425,000 tonnes of SO_2, (ii) 137,000 tonnes of NO_x, (iii) 14,000 tonnes of fine particulates and (iv) 6,000 tonnes of black smoke; and what evaluation he has made of the estimates of mortality and morbidity given in quantification of the effects of air pollution on health in the United Kingdom (Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants, 1998). [65334]

Ms Jowell: A detailed estimate of the effects of air pollution on health was published in a Report issued last year by the Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants (COMEAP), Quantification of the Effects of Air Pollution on Health in the United Kingdom. The Committee concluded that current levels of air pollution probably play an important role in bringing forward the deaths of at least between 12,000 and 24,000 vulnerable people each year and a similar number of hospital admissions, though it stressed that air pollution is likely to be one of a number of factors affecting the clinical condition of seriously ill people.

The review of the national air quality strategy, as announced by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister on 13 January 1999, Official Report, columns 214–15, re-examines the prospects for reducing emissions of eight pollutants covered by the Strategy and the effect that this would have on ambient levels of air pollution. This Department's Report, Economic Appraisal of the Health Effects of Air Pollution, also published yesterday in association with the review, contains an overview of the health effects of air pollution adding to that presented in the COMEAP Report.

Attention Deficit Disorder Syndrome

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research commissioned by his Department has been carried out into attention deficit disorder syndrome in the last three years. [64910]

Ms Jowell: We fund health and medical research in a number of ways:

The Department funds research and development to support its work on policy development and evaluation in health and social care. The Department also manages the National Health Service research and development levy which is used to support research and development of relevance to the National Health Service in hospitals, general practice and other health care settings, and to fund the NHS research and development programme. In addition, the Medical Research Council—which receives most of its income via grant-in-aid from the Office of Science and Technology in the Department of Trade and Industry—funds medical research as part of the Government's funding of the science and engineering base.

Details of projects directly funded by the Department or supported through the NHS research and development levy can be found on the National Research Register (NRR). This is available in most medical libraries and in the Library on CD Rom, and on the Internet: http://www.doh.gov.uk/nrr.htm. The NRR also contains many details of projects/trials funded by the MRC and other funders.

NHS Executive, South Thames have commissioned a project "Pathways to treatment in children at risk of attention deficit/hyperactivity disorder and hyperkinetic disorder" at Kings College Hospital.

The MRC supports a number of studies into the causes and treatment of attention deficit hyperactivity disorder. Current support is centred on cognitive and behavioural strategies carried out at the MRC Child Psychiatry Unit in London. There have also been some recent MRC funded genetics studies carried out at the Institute of Psychiatry and the University of Manchester.

The NRR indicates that other NHS trusts are undertaking research in the field.

Priorities for Departmental research and development support for the development of policy are determined through discussion with policy colleagues, the Departmental Research Committee and Ministers. In the NHS research and development programme, priorities take account of widespread consultation with those using, delivering and managing services, with a framework overseen by the Central Research and Development Committee for the NHS. In all cases, priorities for our budgets reflect analysis of the burden of disease, potential benefits, Government priorities and take account of the responsibilities and work of other funders.

Regional offices of the NHS Executive run response mode funding schemes to which applications of relevance to the NHS can be made. The MRC also always welcomes high quality applications for support into any aspect of human health and these are judged in open competition with other demands on funding. Awards are made by both the NHS and the MRC according to the scientific quality and importance of proposals.

Autism

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what data his Department have collated with respect to the incidence of autism in children; and if he will list the number of such children in each of the last 20 years. [64912]

Mr. Hutton: The Department does not collate information about the incidence of autism in children. It is for the local statutory authorities to determine the needs of children with autism in their area and work together effectively to ensure that these needs are met.

Services for Older People

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the timetable is for the development of a National Service framework for the care of older people; and when the consultation will take place. [65324]

Mr. Hutton: The process for the development of the national service framework for the care of older people is already underway, and the framework will be operational from April 2000. Co-chairs of the External Reference Group that will advise the Government on the development of the framework were announced on 21 December 1998 and it is expected that the External Reference Group will be formed within the next month.

The External Reference Group will draw on views from all stakeholders in the care of older people throughout the process.

Children's Rights

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress made on the Government's report on the implementation of the United Nations convention on children's rights; and if he will make a statement. [65255]

Mr. Hutton: The Government have been making good progress with the preparation of the Second United Kingdom report on the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child. The process was launched in February 1998 with a national conference in London which discussed key timetable and procedural requirements. Reports from across Government Departments and non-governmental organisations (NGOs) were assembled into a consultative draft which was circulated to NGOs in November. In addition, the Government have been greatly assisted by an advisory group which has included NGOs from across the UK. Ministers will be considering the final draft of the UK report in the New Year and it is expected to be sent to the Committee on Children in Geneva in March 1999 and published shortly thereafter in the UK.

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the role of (a) children's rights commissioners, (b) children's ombudspersons and (c) independent officers for children in other European countries; and if he will publish the results. [65256]

Mr. Hutton: We have recently made a number of announcements which take into account the recommendations of the Health Select Committee on Children Looked After by Local Authorities (July 1998) and the Children's Safeguards Review (1997). In the White Paper on Social Services (November 1998) and the Government response to the Health Select Committee (December 1998), we made commitments to introduce new mechanisms which will enable it and other responsible agencies to keep issues of children's rights and safeguards under careful scrutiny. These include establishing children's rights officers in each of the eight Commissions for Care Standards; periodic joint reporting from all the inspectorates dedicated exclusively to children; and continuing the work of the ministerial task force on children's safeguards. In addition, work on listening to and responding to the views and aspirations of children is a priority area for grant to local authorities within the quality protects programme.

These announcements were made having taken into account information on the 10 or so other countries known to have national Children's Rights Commissioner or posts with similar titles. We are not in present circumstances persuaded that it would be desirable to create such a national mechanism additional to the roles of the courts, the police and the prosecuting authorities, the various Commissions (Parliamentary, Health and local government) which already exist, the responsibilities of local and health authorities to deal with complaints and the various inspection and regulatory arrangements for ensuring that safeguards for children are properly implemented, and that their voices are heard.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many asylum seekers have required treatment for (a) nutritional disease, (b) psychological illnesses and (c) AIDS-related illnesses in the last three years; [65470]

(2) what has been the cost to the NHS of treating asylum seekers in each of the last three years [65469]

Mr. Hutton: National Health Service hospital treatment, received by a patient who has made a formal application to the Government for permission to take refuge in the United Kingdom, is the responsibility of the health authority for the district in which they are residing. Details on the types of treatment required, the numbers and the total cost to the NHS of such patients is not held centrally.

Trust Merger (Bedfordshire)

Sir David Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to make a decision on the proposal to merge the South Bedfordshire Community Health Care Trust and the Bedford and Shires Health Care Trust; and if he will make a statement. [65516]

Mr. Denham: The submission is currently with Ministers and a decision will be announced shortly.

Anglusia and Anosmia

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in the United Kingdom suffer from (a) anglusia, (b) anosmia, and (c) both anglusia and anosmia; what research his Department (i) is conducting and (ii) has commissioned into the (A) cause and (B) treatment of these problems; and if loss of these senses is defined by his Department as a disability. [65619]

Mr. Hutton: The National Health Service does not collect centrally the numbers of people suffering from anglusia (we believe this is an incorrect name for a disease resulting in loss of smell) and anosmia, and is not currently commissioning any research in this area.

The Disability Discrimination Act 1995 defines a disability as "A physical or mental impairment which has a substantial and long-term adverse effect on a person's ability to carry out normal day-to-day activities".

The Department would use this definition, which may be applicable to these cases.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the draft Statutory Instrument published on 6 November by the Medicines Control Agency in Consultation Document MLX 249 was at that time circulated to right hon. and hon. Members; if he approved that draft Statutory Instrument; and if it is the intention of the Agency to seek implementation of that draft Statutory Instrument by 1 April. [65722]

Ms Jowell: As is the usual practice, copies of the Medicines Control Agency's Consultation Letter MLX 249 were placed in the Library. We will decide in due course whether and when legislative proposals are to be brought before the House.

CABINET OFFICE

Civil Service (Delegations)

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what delegations have been made in 1998 under the Civil Service (Management Functions) Act 1992; to whom those delegations were made; and what were the main conditions attached to them. [66129]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: Since the last report to Parliament, on 13 January 1998, Official Report, column 162, Ministers and statutory office holders in charge of departments[1] have been given delegated authority (from 1 April 1998) under the Civil Service (Management Functions) Act 1992 to determine in respect of home civil servants in their respective departments the recruitment standards for health and coping with the demands of the job.

The delegation was subject to the condition that recipients comply with the provisions of the Civil Service Management Code as amended from time to time. Copies of the Civil Service Management Code are available in the Library of the House.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nuclear Fuels

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the proliferation risks posed by the use of plutonium-mixed-oxide based nuclear fuels. [64816]

Mr. Battle: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, on 2 December 1997, Official Report, column 122.

Ambassador's Residence

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what prices were accepted by his Department for the British Ambassador's residence and associated property which were for sale by public tender on 2 December. [65683]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 14 December 1998, Official Report, column 403, in respect of the sale of the Glencairn Estate in Dublin. Tenders have now been evaluated, but we have not yet closed the sale. Even when we do, it is not our policy to reveal details of price and other terms agreed in such transactions.

Sudan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the human rights implications of the trial of Hilary Boma and Lino Sebit in Sudan; and if he will make a statement. [64841]

Mr. Fatchett: There have been a number of disturbing allegations about the trial of those people charged with plotting and carrying out the bombings in Khartoum in June 1998. We have raised these with the Sudanese authorities in Khartoum and in London.

At the end of December, the Constitutional Circle of the Sudanese High Court ruled that the trial of 20 defendants, including the two Catholic priests Hilary Boma and Lino Sebit, be suspended while the High Court considers an appeal challenging the legality of the defendants being tried before a military court.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation in Sierra Leone. [65699]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are very concerned by the current situation in Sierra Leone. The democratically elected government remains under direct threat from a strong rebel force. We are closely monitoring the humanitarian situation. We fully support the democratically elected government of Sierra Leone; and the efforts of the Military Observer Group of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOMOG) to restore peace and security. We are providing £3 million worth of direct logistic assistance to ECOMOG and the Government of Sierra Leone. HMS Norfolk, a Type 23 frigate, has been instructed to move to the region as a precautionary measure. We are monitoring events in Sierra Leone carefully. We are in close touch with the United Nations and others about the situation on the ground.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken by the Government to publicise the legal position on the supply of arms to Sierra Leone since the publication of the Legg report; and if he will make a statement. [65704]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Following the adoption by the Security Council on 5 June 1998 of a new resolution on the supply of arms to Sierra Leone, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary issued a press statement welcoming its adoption. On 16 June 1998 I described the content of the resolution in my written answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Crausby), Official Report, column 199, drawing attention to the fact that the resolution would ensure that the arms embargo on Sierra Leone applied to non-governmental forces but made explicit exemption for ECOMOG and the United Nations. I also explained that Orders in Council were being prepared to give full effect to the resolution in UK law.

In addition to my right hon. Friend's press statement the FCO News Department briefed the media extensively on the details of the resolution both before and after its adoption. In addition a telegram issued on 23 July informing all FCO and Whitehall Departments, and posts overseas, of the scope and implications of the provisions of the Orders in Council.

These steps were taken before the publication of the Legg report on 27 July.

Iraq

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on reports that information obtained by UNSCOM inspectors in Iraq was made available to the United States Government; if any such information was made available to Her Majesty's Government; what inquiries he has made into such reports; and what discussions he has had with the US Government concerning these reports. [65696]

Mr. Fatchett: Both the UK and US Governments have made clear that all information exchanges between themselves and UNSCOM have been strictly in pursuit of UNSCOM's mandate to dismantle Iraq's Weapons of Mass Destruction capability.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation in Iraq. [65697]

Mr. Fatchett: We are currently considering ideas with friends and allies for a way forward on Iraq. Discussions in the Security Council are focusing on disarmament questions and the humanitarian situation in Iraq. We are also looking with EU partners at proposals for alleviating the suffering to which Saddam Hussein continues to subject the Iraqi people.

Arms Supplies

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what evidence he has obtained of British companies supplying weapons to (a) the Congo, (b) Uganda and (c) Liberia; and if he will make a statement; [65698]

(2) what evidence he has obtained of possible breaches of the UN embargo on arms supplies to Sierra Leone; what investigation he has ordered into reports of such breaches; and if he will make a statement; [65703]

(3) what evidence he has obtained of British companies supplying weapons to Sierra Leone; what investigation he has ordered into reports of such supplies; and if he will make a statement. [65702]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: A recent newspaper article alleged that two British companies may have been involved in supplying arms to Sierra Leone, via the Gambia and Liberia, in breach of the UN arms embargo. The article also alleged that one of the companies may have delivered arms to the DRC via Uganda and Rwanda. The FCO have drawn these allegations to the attention of Customs and Excise who are responsible for the investigation and prosecution of any alleged breaches of UK legislation implementing arms embargoes.

Kosovo

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation in Kosovo. [65682]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The OSCE-led Kosovo Verification Mission (KVM) has already demonstrated its ability to make real difference to the situation on the ground by negotiating local ceasefires in Podujevo during the Christmas weekend and playing an instrumental role in negotiations concerning the release of 8 Yugoslav soldiers seized by the UCK on 8 January. There are currently 745 KVM personnel on the ground in Kosovo, 110 of whom are British.

It is crucial that the ceasefire be maintained. We are concerned at the rising tensions in recent weeks, with provocations from both sides. We have called on both sides to show restraint and pursue their objectives through negotiations.

The UK is pressing for rapid progress on the political track which alone can tackle the roots of the problem, and fully supports the efforts of US Envoy Ambassador Chris Hill and EU Special Envoy Ambassador Petritsch. This is not a conflict which either side can win militarily, and now above all is the time for the Government in Belgrade and the leaders of the Kosovo Albanians to show the courage and vision to engage seriously in negotiations with direct international involvement.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Teachers

14. Sir David Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his plans for the future of the teaching profession. [64049]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Government are investing £19 billion extra over the next three years to improve education in the UK. Part of this investment is intended to modernise the teaching profession. The Green Paper, "Teachers: meeting the challenge of change", published in early December, set out a wide-ranging vision of stronger school leadership; rewards for success and incentives for excellence; a stronger culture of personal development; and better support in the classroom.

Numeracy Hour

15. Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what evidence he has obtained of the effectiveness of the numeracy hour in primary schools. [64050]

Ms Estelle Morris: Reports from OFSTED and the National Foundation for Educational Research both point to the success of the daily mathematics lesson piloted in the National Numeracy Project. The daily lesson is an important part of the National Numeracy Strategy and will begin in primary schools this September.

Sex Education

16. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of sex education in schools. [64053]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Reports from the Office for Standards in Education have indicated that standards of sex education are adequate or better in most schools. The Government wish to build on the good practice which exists.

Information Technology

17. Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans the Government have to encourage greater use of information technology in education. [64055]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Government's plans for Information and Communications Technologies in education were set out in 'Our Information Age' and in the Government's National Grid for Learning Challenge, 'Open for Learning, Open for Business', which were published last year. Copies are available in the Library.

33. Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the role of information technology in reducing the administrative work load of teachers. [64073]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information and communication technologies (ICT) have a central role to play in reducing the bureaucratic burden on teachers, particularly in reducing the burdens involved in administration and in preparing for lessons. Key targets for the National Grid for Learning (NGfL) include that by 2002, serving teachers should feel confident and be competent to teach using ICT within the curriculum, and all general administrative communications with schools and collection of data from schools should largely cease to be paper-based.

These targets were set out in the NGfL consultation paper Connecting the Learning Society and subsequent challenge paper Open for Learning, open for business. They were re-affirmed in our Green Paper on modernising the teaching profession. We are taking forward a wide-ranging programme of work to ensure they are met, including:

- providing over £700m for ICT in UK schools up to 2002, and a further £230 from the New Opportunities Fund from 1999 for teacher training in the curriculum use of ICT;
- developing high quality materials for the National Grid for Learning and the DfEE Standards Site, including non-mandatory schemes of work to help teachers plan their work. We are also working with and encouraging other public and private sector organisations to do the same;
- improving our ability to collect and share data electronically and communicate electronically with schools and Local Education Authorities.

But improving the use of ICT is not the only way to cut bureaucracy. We need to reduce burdens on teachers in other ways too, including cutting the amount of unnecessary paper they have to deal with and ensuring they have adequate support in their work. We are working vigorously to ensure that happens, so that teachers can focus on raising standards for all children.

Disabled People (Civil Rights)

18. Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress he has made in securing civil rights for the disabled. [64056]

Ms Hodge: The Disability Rights Task Force, which I chair, has reported on the role and functions of a Disability Rights Commission and the Government have recently introduced a Bill to establish the Commission. The Task Force is now looking at what further rights disabled people might need and is due to make its final recommendations by July.

In the meantime we are pressing ahead with the implementation of the later rights in Part III of the Disability Discrimination Act 1950. The first phase will come into force in October, with the second phase due in 2004. They will give disabled people important new rights in relation to access to goods, facilities and services.

We have also taken an early opportunity to reduce the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 exemption threshold and bring more small employers into the DDA's employment provisions. Other Government initiatives include the extension, from October 1999, of Part M of the building regulations Access and Facilities for Disabled People to cover all new dwellings with the aim of enabling disabled people to visit friends and relatives more easily and to manage reducing mobility better, remaining in their own homes for longer.

The Rail Vehicle Accessibility Regulations came into effect in November 1998. Full guidance will be issued to all those affected early this year. The guidance will be a source of information to the industry on a range of issues, for example, the use of colour contrast in vehicle liveries and will apply to all new rail vehicles entering service from 1 January 1999.

New Deal (Medway)

19. Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the total investment in schools in Medway through the new deal has been to date. [64058]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Medway schools were included in those projects which were supported by Kent Local Education Authority in the first round of the New Deal for Schools in September 1997. The Department allocated £1,159,927 to Kent Local Education Authority to support projects costing £1,267,173 in this round. A further £1,186,618 was allocated specifically to the Medway Unitary Authority in April 1998 as part of the second round of the New Deal for Schools to support projects costing £1,228,134.

Higher Education Funding

21. Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on funding of higher education. [64061]

Mr. Mudie: As a result of the modernisation of funding arrangements for higher education, an extra £776 million will be available for higher education over the next two years, 1999–2000, and 2000–2001 under the plans announced on 8 December 1998.

This very good settlement will allow for growth in student numbers, for improving quality and raising standards, for investment in teaching and IT infrastructure and for boosting research.

Disability Rights Commission

22. Ms Christine Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he plans to establish the Disability Rights Commission. [64062]

Ms Hodge: The Disability Rights Commission Bill was introduced into Parliament on 3 December 1998 and had its second reading in the House of Lords on 17 December 1998. Subject to Parliament enacting the Bill we would expect the Commission to be established in the year 2000.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to ensure maximum access to the Disability Rights Commission. [64045]

Mr. Blunkett: We want the Disability Rights Commission to help as many people as possible. The Commission will be expected to ensure that its services are accessible to all those who seek to use them taking full account of the needs of disabled people.

Drugs Misuse

23. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance relating to drug-misuse has been issued to schools by his Department since the appointment of the UK anti-drugs co-ordinator in October 1997. [64063]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department published on 18 November 1998 guidance on good practice in drug education in schools and the youth service. It includes advice for teachers and youth workers on the effective delivery of drug education, and on dealing with drug-related incidents. The guidance was sent to all Chief Education Officers of local education authorities, and is available to all schools free of charge.

The Department also published in March last year a booklet summarising a number of innovative drug education projects supported through the Department's Grants for Education Support and Training (GEST) programme in 1996–97. It offers a number of examples of the range of different approaches teachers and others may like to use in the delivery of drug education.

Copies of both publications are in the Library.

Literacy Hour

24. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what impact the literacy hour has had on standards of literacy in primary schools. [64064]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Literacy Hour began in primary schools in September 1998. The vast majority of teachers are teaching the daily hour, which has had a considerable impact on teaching methods and organisation of lessons. Evaluations of the pilot National Literacy Project, published last month by OFSTED and the NFER, confirm that the Literacy Hour is based on teaching methods that will raise standards. Children who started some way below the national average in their reading scores made eight to 12 months progress above what would normally be expected, in less than two years.

Higher Education

25. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what actions he is taking to encourage access to higher education. [64065]

28. Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action he is taking to encourage access to higher education. [64068]

Mr. Mudie: We have doubled Access Funds and extended them to part-time students; increased the number of student places; enabled the Higher Education Funding Council for England to allow funding of £30 million per annum for widening participation activities and provided for fees to be waived for part-time students on benefits or who have lost their jobs during their study. Further measures are under consideration.

Further Education Funding

26. Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his plans for funding of further education. [64066]

Mr. Mudie: This Government have announced that further education colleges will have £725 million more over the next two years. This will enable major progress to be made towards providing for an extra 700,000 students in further education by 2001–02 and raising standards across the sector.

School Councils

27. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of schools which currently have school councils. [64067]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department does not collect such data centrally. However, in a survey for the Institute of Citizenship Studies—Citizenship Education in Primary Schools (Kerr 1996), 14 per cent. of the 144 schools responding said they had a school council; some 75 per cent. said they involved pupils in negotiating rules on behaviour. In a similar survey of secondary schools—Citizenship Education in Secondary Schools—a national survey (Fogelman 1991)—around 60 per cent. of the 455 schools surveyed said they had school councils.

Education Welfare Officers

29. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals he has to improve the training and qualifications of education welfare officers. [64069]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him on 22 October 1998, Official Report, columns 1189–90.

Three-year-olds

30. Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much has been allocated to local authorities to enable them to provide pre-school places for three-year-olds. [64070]

Ms Hodge: On 30 December 1998, the Department announced that we would be making available £390 million additional funding for over the next three years. This will enable the participation rate for three-year-olds in early education to approximately double to 66 per cent. by 2002. I should also add that there has been an increase of 9½ per cent. in Local Education Authority's standard spending assessments. Local Education Authorities can spend this money on early years education if they wish.

School Reforms

31. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to monitor the implementation of his reforms in schools. [64071]

Ms Estelle Morris: The overall effect of our education reforms on schools standards will be monitored through the annual collation and publication of examination and test results, and through the continuing inspection programme of OFSTED. There will also be evaluation of the impact of individual policies.

Internet

32. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimates he has made of the number of schools connected to the Internet; and if he will make a statement. [64072]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Latest estimates indicate that over 12,000 schools are connected to the Internet. Our aim is that all schools should be online and able to benefit from access the National Grid for Learning by 2002. To help achieve this target we are supporting over £700 million of ICT-related expenditure in UK schools over this period.

Youth Service

34. Barbara Follett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his plans for the youth service. [64074]

Mr. Mudie: I refer my hon. Friend to my oral answer today, Official Report, column 431, to my hon. Friend the Member for Corby (Mr. Hope).

Class Sizes

35. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the number of children between the ages of seven and 11 years currently being taught in classes of over 30 in maintained schools in England. [64075]

Ms Estelle Morris: In January 1998 there were 832,668 pupils in Key Stage 2 classes of more than 30 pupils taught by one teacher.

Special Needs

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the potential impact of delegation of spending on the provision of support for children with special educational needs. [64059]

Ms Estelle Morris: The new arrangements for school funding continue to allow flexibility for spending to support children's special educational needs to be made by local education authorities or by school governing bodies as appropriate.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list his Department's approved

Individual local education authorities, however, may be prepared to release details of the funding that has been approved. The overall total funding to be provided by central Government through PFI credits for all of the above projects is £705 million. Three projects have completed negotiations and have signed contracts. Age Discrimination

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what recent representations he has received on age discrimination. [64052]

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals he has to discourage age discrimination; and if he will make a statement. [64051]

Mr. Andrew Smith: With key partners such as TUC, CBI and Age Concern, we have been developing a draft code of practice to promote age diversity in employment. It covers all aspects of employment, including recruitment, selection training, development, redundancy and retirement.

The most recent representations on age discrimination in employment have been on the subject of the draft Code which was published for wider consultation on 16 November 1998. We are pleased with the wide interest the draft prompted, with copies being distributed to individuals, businesses, interest groups representing older people and Trades Unions. The consultation came to an end on 8 January and we are currently analysing the responses and representations we have received. The full version of the Code will be launched in the Spring.

Digital Broadcasting

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what role his Department has in the tendering process for the provision of digital broadcasting services to support the GCSE curriculum; [65690]

(2) how many bids have been received in response to the tender for the provision of digital broadcasting services to support the GCSE curriculum; and from which companies; [65689]

(3) what advertising, subscription and sponsorship revenue sources will be permitted to the provider of digital broadcast services to support the GCSE curriculum; [65691]

(4) if he will place in the Library a copy of the tender document for the provision of digital broadcasting services to support the GCSE curriculum; [65686]

(5) which national curriculum subjects will be supported by a digitally broadcast education service; [65688]

(6) what estimate he has made of the cost to public funds of establishing a digital broadcast service to support the GCSE curriculum in (a) year one, (b) year two and (c) year three of operation; [65684]

(7) what plans he has to encourage (a) schools, (b) individuals and (c) others to subscribe to a new digital broadcast channel to support the GCSE curriculum. [65693]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department for Education and Employment has invited companies with a broadcasting or transmission licence and experience in the provision of educational broadcast material to submit tenders on a competitive basis for the provision of specific digital broadcasting services to support the GCSE curriculum. These services will support GCSEs in English, mathematics, double award science, history and geography.

Bids are currently being considered and information relating to them is commercial in confidence. The precise cost and nature of the services, plans to promote them and permitted sources of revenue will depend on the outcome of the tender exercise and will form part of any contract. A copy of the Invitation to Tender for the digital broadcasting services is being deposited in the Library.

The Department has no plans for a new digital broadcast channel to support the GCSE curriculum. Decisions on such a channel, and on its possible funding, would be for individual broadcasters.

Competitive Bidding (Education Grants)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) for how many of the specific grants for education competitive bidding was required in (a) 1985, (b) 1992, (c) 1997 and (d) 1998; [65511]

(2) if he will list, for each annual programme of specific grants for education since 1992, whether the circulars issued were submitted for consultation. [65512]

Ms Estelle Morris: The number of specific grants requiring competitive bidding by local education authorities was (a) 14 in 1985, (b) 15 in 1992, (c) 20 in 1997 and (d) 15 in 1998, representing bids for programmes starting the following financial year. Circulars covering specific grant programmes were submitted for consultation through local government organisations in 1992, 1993, 1994, 1995 and 1996.

Phono-graphics

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment his Department has made of the phono-graphics method of teaching children to read, with particular reference to children with dyslexia. [65618]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Standards and Effectiveness Unit (SEU) has had discussions with the authors of the scheme, and remain in contact. The National Literacy Strategy enshrines many of the principles underpinning the scheme, including the importance of phonemic awareness for making progress in literacy. The strategy is a practical programme for raising standards in primary schools which aims to ensure that all children, including those with specific learning difficulties such as dyslexia, are taught to read and write well. All teachers are being trained in the most effective methods of teaching literacy, and schools are implementing a structured daily Literacy Hour.

PRIME MINISTER

Cabinet Meetings

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list (a) the dates on which Cabinet meetings have taken place since 1 September 1998 and (b) which of those meetings were attended by (i) the Minister of Transport and (ii) the Minister for the Environment. [65517]

The Prime Minister: In accordance with longstanding practice, information about proceedings of the Cabinet is not made public. However, when the new Cabinet was announced in July 1998 it was made clear that, although not a member of the Cabinet, the Minister of Transport would be invited to attend its meetings.

Official Spokesman

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if the phrase used by his official spokesman on 21 December 1998 concerning the intellect of the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) was used with his authority. [65680]

The Prime Minister: My Official Spokesman was questioning the argument that action against Saddam Hussein should be taken only if he were removed from power. It was, and is, my view that this argument is not valid.

WALES

Crickhowell House

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what, under the current arrangements made by the Welsh Office for the tenancy of Crickhowell House in Cardiff, are (a) the length of the lease and its final year, (b) the current rent and the provisions for review, (c) the repairing and other responsibilities of the lease and (d) the financial liability other than the rent at the commencement or termination of the lease. [65283]

Mr. Michael: (a) The Welsh Office entered into a 30 year lease starting in 1993.

(b) For reasons of commercial confidentiality, it is Government policy not to disclose information about rent levels for individual properties. There is provision for 5 yearly reviews on 29 September 2003, 29 September 2008, 29 September 2013 and 30 August 2018.

(c) It is a full repairing lease.

(d) The financial liability, other than rent, is for rates maintenance costs, and works to house the Assembly. At the termination of the lease, dilapidations and reinstatement of the building will fall due.

Objective I Status

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the (a) dates and (b) venues for public seminars on Objective I status for West Wales and the Valleys organised by his Department. [65414]

Mr. Hain: The European Task Force will be organising a series of public seminars across Wales to discuss the outline national development strategy it has prepared. The national development strategy will explicitly cover the needs of all of Wales—though clearly allowing for local variances—and the policy objectives for the Objective 1 development plan will emanate from it. The seminars will be held during March in the middle of the consultation period. Exact dates and locations will be announced shortly.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Digital Broadcasting

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what plans his Department has to fund a digital broadcasting service to support the GCSE curriculum; [65685]

(2) what steps he has taken to inform digital television licence holders of his plans for a digital broadcast education service to support the GCSE curriculum; [65695]

(3) what advice he has received from commercial broadcasters as to the ability of a digitally broadcasting education service to be self-financing; [65687]

(4) if he will make a statement on the implications for BBC Education Services of the establishment of publicly funded digital broadcast service to support the GCSE curriculum. [65694]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I have been asked to reply.

The Department for Education and Employment has invited companies with a broadcasting or transmission licence and experience in the provision of educational broadcast material to submit tenders on a competitive basis for the provision of specific digital broadcasting services to support the GCSE curriculum. These services will support GCSEs in English, mathematics, double award science, history and geography. Bids are currently being considered and information relating to them is commercial in confidence. The precise cost and nature of the services, plans to promote them and permitted sources of revenue will depend on the outcome of the tender exercise and will form part of any contract. A copy of the Invitation to Tender for the digital broadcasting services is being deposited in the Library.

The Department has no plans for a new digital broadcast channel to support the GCSE curriculum. Decisions on such a channel, and on its possible funding, would be for individual broadcasters.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Hurricane Mitch

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans the Government have to provide long-term aid for the reconstruction of Nicaragua and Honduras after the period of the current emergency aid. [65336]

Mr. Foulkes: We are looking at a number of ways of giving help to those affected by Hurricane Mitch, both in the short and long term.

During the immediate emergency phase, we provided funding for food, medicine and shelter through non-governmental organisations and four British ships did tremendous work during the relief effort, including rescuing people stranded in remote areas.

Following a Department for International Development (DFID) mission to the region in November, a further programme of assistance was announced which included rebuilding secondary roads and bridges, repairing water and sanitation infrastructure, restoring primary health and education services and work on epidemiological surveillance and epidemic control.

Our plans for help in the long term include a fund to strengthen the capacity of local organisations to enable them to make fuller use of loans provided by the Inter American Development Bank and a project aimed at regenerating crop production through provision of appropriate seed.

We are also currently investigating the possibility of working with the Pan American Health Organisation on health projects in the region, a programme of longer term support alongside the emergency road-building project announced in my statement of 4 December, a micro finance scheme, and support to a regional rural development and natural resources technical assistance unit (RUTA).

On debt, we are pleased that the World Bank has now approved a multilateral Trust Fund to help with the servicing of multilateral debts. The UK has pledged £10 million to this fund, and total pledges now stand at well over $100 million. When the Paris Club met at the beginning of December, they agreed a debt relief package worth over £100 million.

Inter University Council

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the Government's responsibilities to people recruited through the Inter University Council as regards pensions and superannuation. [65115]

Mr. Foulkes: The British Government are responsible for the payment supplements to pensions of only the specific former Inter University Council staff who qualify under the "Scheme for the Application of Supplementation and Pension Increases to FSSU Benefits of British Staff who retire from an IUC Associated University Overseas". The Scheme is administered by the British Council.

DEFENCE

Territorial Army

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons the unposted list for Territorial Army officers is to be discontinued. [62179]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

HMS Invincible

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons HMS Invincible has been deployed to the Gulf. [65378]

Mr. George Robertson: HMS Invincible together with HMS Newcastle and RFA Fort Austin have deployed to the Gulf to reinforce our capability to keep Saddam Hussein contained. In parallel to further diplomatic discussion this sends the clearest possible signal that we mean business.

Kuwait (Air Bases)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assurances he has received from the Government of Kuwait about the use of Kuwaiti air bases for future bombing missions against Iraq. [65377]

Mr. George Robertson: We have regular discussions with the Government of Kuwait on a wide range of issues surrounding the basing and activities of UK forces in Kuwait. The details of these discussions are confidential and I am withholding them under Section 1b (International Relations) of the code of practice on access to Government information.

Southern Watch

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the Prime Minister of France about French participation in Southern Watch, based in Saudi Arabia; and if he will make a statement. [65374]

Mr. George Robertson: I have had no discussions with the Prime Minister of France but have spoken to the French Minister of Defence, Mr. Richard, on a wide range of issues of mutual concern, including Operation Southern Watch. French aircraft have not participated in Operation Southern Watch flights since missions resumed following Operation Desert Fox last month. We hope French aircraft will participate shortly.

Armed Forces (Ethics and Discipline)

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he intends to publish a joint service guide to ethics and discipline for the armed forces. [65628]

Mr. Doug Henderson: No.

The armed services each issue a variety of guidelines which identify the conduct expected from their personnel and accommodate the differences between individual service environments. These guidelines, which are periodically reviewed, make it clear that high standards of behaviour are expected from individuals at all times.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reason the Baghdad Museum of Natural History was hit by US and UK forces; and what is his assessment of the damage done. [65681]

Mr. George Robertson: The Baghdad Museum of Natural History was not targeted by US or UK forces during Operation Desert Fox. At most, it may have sustained light superficial damage from an attack on an Iraqi command and control facility located approximately half a mile away.

Mr. Tony Geraghty

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons the home of Mr. Tony Geraghty has been searched by MoD Police and his computer files and other material seized. [65472]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is a matter for the Chief Constable of the Ministry of Defence Police Agency. I have asked the Chief Constable to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from W. E. E. Boreham to Mr. Tam Dalyell, dated 14 January 1999:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the house search and property seized by the Ministry of Defence Police from Tony Geraghty, as this falls into my area of responsibility as Chief Constable/Chief Executive of the Ministry of Defence Police Agency.

Computer files and research material were seized, under warrant, from the home address of Mr. Geraghty, as part of an investigation in connection with alleged offences against the Official Secrets Act. The property seized is currently under evaluation.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if Liberal Democrat members of the Cabinet Joint Consultative Committee received briefings on the green paper on pensions before its contents were disclosed to hon. Members. [64772]

Mr. Darling: After discussion with the right hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown), I have discussed matters in relation to pensions with the Liberal Democrat pensions spokesman, the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb). I am always prepared to discuss any aspect of my Department's policy with right hon. and hon. Members. I have held no discussion on pensions policy with the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith), nor have I attended the Joint Consultative Committee.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will break down into its constituent parts the £150 billion figure he has given for the privatisation of the state pension system; [65005]

(2) if he will break down into its constitution parts his £150 billion estimate for privatising current state pension provision. [65175]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 11 January 1999]: The figure of £150 billion for the privatisation of the State Pension system is the cumulative Public Sector Borrowing Requirement cost to 2040 of introducing the previous Government's policy Basic Pension Plus. This sum represents the increased cost of National Insurance rebates (approximately £300 billion) less savings from changing the tax treatment of pensions (approximately £150 billion).

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for the structure and level of national insurance rebates for those who take out stakeholder pensions. [65580]

Mr. Timms: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to my right hon. Friend the Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 11 January 1999, Official Report, column 66.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to paragraph 21, page 4, of "Partnership in Pensions", Cm 4179, what is the basis for the statement that the minimum income guarantee provides a minimum income in retirement without the stigma some people associate with income support. [65594]

Mr. Timms: We have completed research into why some pensioners do not claim their benefit entitlements and pilots into the best ways of encouraging them to do so. We are using the results to develop a strategy to overcome the barriers to claiming, including the problem of stigma. For example, we propose to run a publicity campaign in 1999 which will emphasise that the minimum income guarantee is an entitlement, not a hand out.

Fraud

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many local authorities have taken up the Government's offer of computer terminals to provide access to "Benefits Agency data", set out in the Green Paper, "Beating Fraud is Everyone's Business", paragraph 8.5. [65451]

Mr. Timms: Of the 409 Local Authorities (LAs) approached, 355 (87 per cent.) have applied for installation of a remote access computer terminal (RAT) and we are currently installing them; by the end of December 1998 some 120 LAs were operating RATs and we are aiming to install the balance by the end of March this year.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans the Government have to replace the London Organised Fraud Investigation Team with a new anti-fraud body. [65445]

Mr. Timms: We are carrying out a review of how organised fraud within Social Security benefits, including fraud in those benefits that are primarily administered by local authorities, can be countered.

The Government are pursuing this within the anti-fraud strategy announced earlier this year in the Green Paper, "Beating Fraud is Everyone's Business: Securing the Future".

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the code of practice for data-matching between different agencies, mentioned in the Green Paper, Beating Fraud is Everyone's Business, paragraph 5.2.7 was published. [65449]

Mr. Timms: The code of practice was published on 12 October 1998.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many reports have been completed by the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate; how many have been submitted to ministers; and how many have been published. [65450]

Mr. Timms: The Benefit Fraud Inspectorate (BFI) have completed eight reports. Of these, five have been submitted to Ministers and published. The remaining three completed reports are to be submitted to Ministers and published shortly.

We expect to receive and publish 12 more BFI reports by the end of March 1999.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the progress made so far on implementation of the personal details computer system for the Benefits Agency. [65452]

Mr. Timms: The Personal Details Computer System (PDCS) will provide the Department with a consistent set of customer personal details for use by all benefit systems. This will improve the accounting and security of benefit expenditure.

All personal details formerly held on the individual Child Benefit and Income Support computer systems, and all personal details from new claims to these benefits, are already being maintained on the PDCS. Additionally, new personal details for Jobseekers Allowance (JSA) and benefits maintained on the pensions computer system (including Retirement Pensions, Incapacity Benefit, Widows Benefit and Maternity Allowance) are being entered directly onto the PDCS.

Presently there are 11.8 million customer records on PDCS. This number will rise to 23.6 million during 1999 following the transfer of existing JSA and pensions computer system records.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many local authorities have implemented the new verification framework to protect against housing benefit fraud; and how many authorities he expects to implement it in the near future. [65453]

Mr. Timms: In 1998–99 funds were made available to help 85 local authorities to implement the verification framework. On 23 December 1998, we announced that extra funding was available to enable all local authorities to implement the framework over the coming year. £100 million extra will be made available to run the framework over the next three years.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many benefit fraudsters have been punished to date by administrative penalties; and how many have been given formal cautions. [65444]

Mr. Timms: Of those offered by the Benefits Agency, 599 administrative financial penalties, and 544 cautions have been accepted. Such information is not collected centrally for local authorities.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what progress has been made on the creation of a comprehensive performance measurement framework for fraud and anti-fraud activity; [65441]

(2) if he will make a statement on the results of the Benefits Agency trials of new performance indicators to measure anti-fraud activity; [65442]

(3) what progress has been made on the development of a national framework for the use of sanctions by agencies involved in social security administration; and when the Government plans to publish the framework; [65443]

(4) what the results have been of the Government's exploration of risk-management techniques to analyse benefit processing in order to shape anti-fraud policies; [65454]

(5) what recent changes have been made to the rules governing replacement of lost Giro cheques; [65446]

(6) when the Government plans to repeat the research aimed at benchmarking public attitudes to benefit fraud, as set out in the Green Paper, "Beating Fraud is Everyone's Business", paragraph 4.18; [65458]

(7) if the development of common core skills and training for fraud investigators has been completed; and when the Government plans to implement the further principles of good practice and continuous learning and development for investigators set out in "Beating Fraud is Everyone's Business", paragraphs 7.6 and 8.4–5; [65460]

(8) if he will make a statement on the measures taken to strengthen the vetting procedures for staff involved in issuing national insurance numbers; [65462]

(9) what steps have been taken to implement methods of cross-checking records within the National Insurance Recording System; and whether the delays in respect of NIRS2 have affected the timetable for implementation; [65464]

(10) if the Government have come to a conclusion on the value of investing in a national intelligence system to counter serious fraud; [65447]

(11) what conclusions the Government have reached as a result of its review of data protection legislation, mentioned in the Green Paper, "Beating Fraud is Everyone's Business", paragraph 5.2.7; and what further possibilities for data-matching beyond his Department have been identified; [65448]

(12) when the Government plans to publish the results of its review of the most commonly broken benefit rules, mentioned in the Green Paper, "Beating Fraud is Everyone's Business", paragraph 5.1.8; [65455]

(13) what progress has been made towards developing a public communication strategy for fraud and welfare reform; [65457]

(14) what conclusions have been reached by the Government in its review of benefit funding arrangements with regard to security against fraud; [65459]

(15) what new steps the Government intends to take to combat landlord housing benefit fraud; and what research it is undertaking or plans to undertake into this problem. [65463]

Mr. Timms: We will publish shortly, our strategy for combating Social Security fraud in the light of the consultation on the Green Paper "Beating Fraud is Everyone's Business: Securing the Future".

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of debt owed by fraudsters to his Department is currently being recovered; what is the average length of time between successful prosecution and recovery of debt; and what the equivalent figures were for each of the previous five years. [65439]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. A new Debt Accounting and Management system to improve management, control and accounting of debt is being designed and developed during 1999.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what dates the ministerial group established to oversee anti-fraud strategy, announced in the Green Paper, "Beating Fraud is Everyone's Business", has met. [65461]

Mr. Timms: "Questions of Procedures for Ministers" makes it clear that information relating to the proceedings of Cabinet or Cabinet Committees is not normally made public, in order to protect the principle of collective responsibility.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many asylum seekers have been found guilty of benefit fraud in the last three years [65471]

Mr. Timms: The information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the cost of benefit payments to asylum seekers in the last three years. [65466]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the average net cost to public funds of the social security payments made to each unemployed person included in the monthly claimant count for the latest year for which figures are available. [65648]

The expenditure figures shown represent the estimated average benefit payment made to claimants of unemployment-related benefit at a single week in May 1997. This is the latest date for which information on all of the benefits concerned is available.
2. Figures relate to Great Britain.
3. Numbers are rounded to the nearest thousand.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Young Offenders

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his Department's policy as to the separation between juveniles and young adults who have been remanded in custody or sentenced to a period of detention. [65286]

Mr. George Howarth: Prison Service policy on the separation of male prisoners is set out in Instruction to Governors 48/1995, a copy of which is in the Library. The Prison Service is currently finalising, in consultation with the Youth Justice Board, the proposals for a new distinct estate for boys aged 15 to 17-years-old, remanded or sentenced to custody, which will better meet their needs.

Girls aged between 15 and 20 sentenced to custody should be held in young offender accommodation, unless a direction under section 1C of the Criminal Justice Act 1982, as amended by the Criminal Justice Act 1988, has been made. 15 and 16-year-old girls are remanded to the care of the local authority; section 43(2)(c) of the Prison Act 1952 requires that 17-year-olds who are remanded in custody are held in prison accommodation.

An assessment is also underway of the needs of girls under 18-years-old.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) boys and (b) girls up to the age of 16 are at present serving sentences in prisons in England and Wales. [65287]

Mr. George Howarth: The currently available information relates to the population on the last day of November 1998 and is given in the table.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information on the numbers of persons granted asylum in the 12 months from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 who had been issued with notice of illegal entry by immigration officials at Dover is given in the table.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many illegal immigrants are currently being detained who arrived at Plymouth Ferry Port; and what were the equivalent figures for each of the last six months. [64756]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information is that, as at 7 January 1999, no more than two persons who had been served with a notice of illegal entry by immigration officials at Plymouth were detained solely under immigration Act powers. Information relating to the previous six months could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many illegal immigrants who arrived at Poole Ferry Port have been refused entry and removed from the UK within seven days of arrival in each of the last 12 months. [64751]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information on the numbers of persons removed or departing voluntarily within seven days of being issued with a notice of illegal entry by immigration officials at Poole, between 1 July 1997 and 30 June 1998 is given in the table.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many citizens of the former Yugoslavia are currently being detained in the UK as illegal immigrants; and what the figures were in each of the last three years. [65297]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I will write to the hon. Member.

Michael Menson

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made by the Police Complaints Authority in its investigation of the police inquiry into the murder of Michael Menson in January 1997; and when the report is expected to be completed. [65067]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police informs me that Michael Menson's family, the Metropolitan Police and the Police Complaints Authority have all agreed that the death of Michael Menson should be reinvestigated.

This reinvestigation is being carried out by Deputy Assistant Commissioner (DAC) John Grieve, who heads the Metropolitan Police Racial and Violent Crime Task Force. This investigation will not be subject to Police Complaints Authority supervision, but there will be lay involvement and very close liaison with the family.

The formal complaint, made by Michael Menson's family, about the initial investigation made by the Metropolitan Police, is still pending. All concerned understand that the family will be given the opportunity to pursue their complaint once DAC Grieve has completed his reinvestigation.

All parties have agreed that it would not be appropriate to conduct a complaints investigation alongside the reinvestigation.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints were made about the service at IND in 1998. [65168]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: 478 complaints were received during 1998 under the formal arrangements for handling complaints against members of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate staff. There is no central record of other complaints, for example, about delays or the merits of individual decisions.

Visas (Students)

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates he has made of the number of foreign language students visiting the UK who outstay the residence rights under the terms of their visas; and what investigations he has made of this matter. [65279]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regret that the information requested is not available. It is not possible to produce estimates of students overstaying as no recordings of passengers leaving the United Kingdom is undertaken. The statistics available on deportation action against overstayers do not show the category under which the person was admitted to this country.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many citizens of Slovakia have sought political asylum in the UK in the last three months; how many applications have been accepted; and what were the figures in each of the last three years. [65263]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information is given in the table.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information is given in the table.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the accommodation of medically-qualified asylum seekers as regards (a) the adequacy of the accommodation and (b) its proximity to institutions where they could use their qualifications or requalify. [65595]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There is no central record of the representations received from medically qualified asylum seekers.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultation he (a) has carried out and (b) plans to carry out with (i) local authorities and (ii) other relevant bodies regarding his proposals for a new support scheme for asylum seekers. [65565]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Consultation with local authorities and other relevant bodies regarding the proposals for the new support scheme has been carried out principally in the following ways:

(a) through the White Paper: "Fairer, faster and firmer—a modern approach to immigration and asylum";

(b) through the formation of a stakeholder group which contains representatives from local authorities, housing associations and the voluntary sector and who have been consulted extensively on a wide range of issues associated with the support proposals;

(c) through consultation on a "process manual" setting out the way in which the support scheme is intended to operate and which I hope to publish shortly;

(d) through ad hoc meetings between the relevant bodies and the asylum seekers support project team which has been set up to carry forward the proposals in the White Paper.

In addition the Asylum Seekers Support Project Team includes the seconded deputy chief executive of the Refugee Council and two seconded officers from local authorities.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what basis transitional funding relief to local authorities for asylum seekers will be allocated for (a) passported refugees, (b) asylum seekers who declared their intention at the port of entry and (c) other asylum seekers. [65573]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Asylum seekers who declare their applications at their ports of entry may be eligible for income support and housing benefit. Other asylum seekers who would otherwise be destitute may be eligible for support from local authority social services departments under the terms of the National Assistance Act 1948 and the Children Act 1989. In these circumstances, it is the Government's intention to reimburse local authorities in this financial year on the basis of a maximum unit cost provision of £165 per week for single adults; £230 per week for families (£240 per week for families in Inner London), £400 per week for unaccompanied children aged 15 or under; and £200 per week for unaccompanied children aged 16 and 17. Those asylum seekers who are subsequently recognised as refugees may also qualify for income support and housing benefit.

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers have been found to be requiring NHS treatment on arrival in the United Kingdom in the past three years. [65468]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information is not available to the Home Office.

Medway Secure Training Centre

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the report of the Inspection of Medway Secure Training Centre will be published; and if he will make a statement. [66319]

Mr. Boateng: The report has been published by the Social Services Inspectorate (SSI) today, and copies of the report have been put in the Library. The report identifies shortcomings in the management of the Secure Training Centre (STC), and makes 32 key recommendations for improving the standard of service being provided by the contractor. All the recommendations have been accepted, and Rebound are taking urgent action to implement these recommendations. The Home Office will be monitoring progress in conjunction with SSI.

The report made a number of recommendations which required immediate action to strengthen management at the centre, and to improve operational procedures and monitoring. The Director at Medway has been working closely with SSI to implement these recommendations, and to introduce more effective strategies for dealing with difficult young people. A stronger management structure has been put in place to support the staff who were praised in the report for their enthusiasm and commitment. More staff are being recruited, and a programme of repair work has been completed.

The Government remain committed to the public/private partnership approach, and to making a positive difference to the lives of persistent young offenders, who despite repeated efforts by the Youth Justice system continue to offend. STCs are a new and challenging initiative, and Medway as the first centre of its kind has had a difficult beginning, but action is now being taken to introduce the positive regime we require. I will be monitoring closely the position at Medway, and a further inspection will be undertaken by SSI later this year.

Impeachment

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the future use of impeachment. [65774]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: None.

TREASURY

Funerals

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the consultation document on pre-payments for funerals is to be published. [66317]

Ms Hewitt: The consultation document entitled "Regulation of Pre-paid Funeral Plans" is published today. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

In my announcement of 29 July 1998, Official Report, column 300, I said that the Government would be looking at ways of excluding from direct regulation under the Financial Services and Markets Bill pre-paid funeral arrangements that offer sufficient protection to consumers. The consultation document explores how to meet that objective without the need for regulation by the Financial Services Authority. It discusses two possible exemptions: plans backed by a life insurance policy (either whole of life or investment-backed); and where a provider has set up a trust arrangement which has sufficient safeguards.

The proposals apply to new plans, but the document asks for views on how existing plans could be enhanced to provide the types of safeguard set out in the document.

Responses should be sent by 30 April to Mrs. Raminder Sandhu, Financial Services Team, HM Treasury, Room 111/G, Parliament Street, London SW1P 3AG.

Pensions Mis-selling

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on progress in the review of personal pensions mis-selling. [66318]

Ms Hewitt: Significant progress has been achieved in the priority review since May 1997. The major firms monitored by the Treasury have advanced from 15 per cent. to 94 per cent. of priority case reviews completed since the Government took office.

Of the 21 firms whose results are set out only one has resolved less than 75 per cent. of its cases. Seventeen have now resolved over 90 per cent. of their cases.

The time limit for completion of the priority review, set by the Personal Investment Authority (PIA), has now expired for the last 19 firms. As of 31 December all firms should have completed the priority review. Consistent with the treatment of the twenty firms already removed from the Treasury's monthly list the Government will look to the PIA for its assessment of whether the remainder have in fact met their targets. Those that have will be removed from the list next month.

Firms must now concentrate their efforts onto phase 2 of the review. It is important that the lessons of the priority review are properly learnt. The Government and the regulators will no longer tolerate delay, and expect all firms to adhere to the regulators' timetable.

Mr. Love: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements are in place to ensure that phase 2 of the personal pensions mis-selling review will complete its outstanding cases within the timescales set out in the review; and if he will make a statement. [65062]

Ms Hewitt: The Financial Services Authority's guidance for phase 2 will include appropriate timescales for completion of the review. FSA will monitor the performance of firms to see that this guidance is adhered to. The regulators have made clear that disciplinary action will continue to be taken against firms that do not conduct their reviews with a sufficient degree of despatch.

Developing Countries (Debt)

Mr. Reed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for (a) Uganda, (b) Mozambique, (c) Bolivia, (d) Guyana, (e) Cote d'Ivoire and (f) Burkina Faso the (i) actual debt service in the five years prior to completion point in the HIPC Initiative and (ii) IMF/World Bank estimates of actual debt service for the five years after completion point. [61490]

Ms Hewitt: The precise information requested is not available. I am, however, writing to my hon. Friend and will place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Higher Rate Taxpayers

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many individuals paid income tax at the higher rate, and, of these, how many filed an income tax return, in the latest year for which figures are available. [64684]

Dawn Primarolo: About 2.0 million taxpayers have paid tax at the higher rate for the 1996–97 tax year. The information available on taxpayers who have filed 1996–97 tax returns to date does not allow the number who have paid higher rate tax to be separately identified. However, the vast majority of higher rate payers will have filed a tax return.

European Code of Conduct Group

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what (a) prior and (b) continuing consultation he has had with the Government of Gibraltar in respect of discussions on taxation in the European Union Code of Conduct Group. [64475]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 17 December 1998]: Discussions on the EU Code of Conduct were held at ministerial level with Government of Gibraltar representatives before the Code of Conduct was agreed on 1 December 1997. Since then the UK Government have kept the Government of Gibraltar informed of significant developments in the Code of Conduct exercise. Gibraltarian officials attended a seminar in September 1998 to discuss the Code and other initiatives to tackle harmful tax competitions. A meeting took place in October 1998 between the Chief Minister and other Government of Gibraltar representatives and senior Foreign and Commonwealth Office, Treasury and Inland Revenue officials to discuss these issues.

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what link the Government have made between consideration of future tax regimes in Gibraltar and voting rights for citizens of Gibraltar in European parliamentary elections, as part of the discussions in the European Union Code of Conduct Group. [64476]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 17 December 1998]: These are two separate and distinct issues. The EU Code of Conduct tackles the specific problem of harmful tax competition. It is only right that Gibraltar should be part of international efforts to ensure fair tax competition and Gibraltar is part of the Community for these purposes. With reference to the issue of voting rights for citizens of Gibraltar in European Parliamentary elections, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the then Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd), on 9 December 1997, Official Report, column 499, to the hon. Member for Tewkesbury (Mr. Robertson).

VAT

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on (a) the legislative base for, (b) the extent of and (c) the duration of (i) full, (ii) temporary and (iii) transitional exemptions in respect of VAT. [64824]

Dawn Primarolo: The legislative base for VAT exemptions and zero rates, in terms of EC law, is the Sixth VAT Directive.

Most of the UK's VAT exemptions, such as finance, insurance, most leasing of property and betting and gaming, are part of the normal VAT system, and there is no expiry date set down in the Sixth Directive. The same is true of the zero rate for exports outside the European Community, and associated supplies.

Under the so-called 'transitional' arrangements of the Sixth VAT Directive, the UK is also able to:

zero rate social items such as food, public transport, books, newspapers and children's clothing (Article 28(2)(a) of the Directive); and exempt certain transactions, the main categories being burials, cremations, and building land (Article 28 (3)(b) of the Sixth VAT Directive).

In addition, there are a number of technical zero rates on goods dispatched (exported) from the UK to other EC member states.

It was originally envisaged that the transitional arrangements would last until 31 December 1996, when they would be replaced by a 'definitive' (Common) VAT system. However, the Commission has not yet put forward legislative proposals for key elements of the replacement Common VAT system. Until they do so, and they are unanimously agreed by member states, the transitional arrangements will continue automatically.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list, for the latest available year, the revenue obtained from VAT charges on (a) building alterations and (b) civil construction; and when VAT was introduced for each. [64809]

Dawn Primarolo: Information in the form requested is not available. However the breakdown of VAT receipts relating to buildings and construction can be provided.

Revenue in 1997–98 from house repairs, improvements and maintenance is estimated to be £1.5 billion and that on all other building work, apart from that which qualifies for zero-rating, to be £1.1 billion.

VAT was introduced for building alterations in 1984 and for construction of new commercial buildings in 1989.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the European Commission (a) gave notice of and (b) commenced, infraction proceedings against Her Majesty's Government concerning the zero rating, or exemption from VAT of (i) building alterations and (ii) construction works; on what legal instrument such actions were based; and what papers relating to such proceedings have been made publicly available. [64810]

Dawn Primarolo: The European Commission gave notice of infraction proceedings by the issue of a reasoned opinion to the UK Government on 4 September 1984. On 13 September 1985 the European Commission made an application to the European Court of Justice, pursuant to Article 169 of the EEC Treaty (as the Treaty was then known), alleging that the UK had breached Article 28(2) of the Sixth Directive. (Article 28(2) provides for the continuation of those zero rates which satisfy the conditions contained in the Second Council Directive of 1967.)

A copy of the report for the hearing of the case (416/85) before the European Court of Justice on 15 September 1987 was placed in the Library of the House of Commons on 23 July 1987. The opinion of the Judge Advocate (2 December 1987) and the judgment of the Court (21 June 1988) were published in European Court Reports, the formal law reports of the European Court of Justice.

New VAT law was introduced in the Finance Act 1989 to reflect the judgment of the European Court of Justice. The construction of commercial buildings became standard rated but dwellings and residential buildings continued to benefit from zero-rating.

The infraction proceedings did not apply to alterations to existing buildings which have been standard rated since 1984.

Lead-free Petrol

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the taxation of lead-free petrol following the phasing out of four star petrol. [64840]

Dawn Primarolo: The Chancellor has received a number of representations about the taxation of lead-free petrol following the phasing out of four star petrol. All of the representations will be carefully considered in the run up to the next Budget.

British Drugs Liaison Officer (Pakistan)

Mr. Singh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what happened to the senior British Drugs Liaison Officer who was detained in Peshawar, Pakistan, after being caught with three kilograms of heroin in his possession in his official vehicle in July 1995. [65075]

Dawn Primarolo: No such incident took place.

Single Wage Earner Families

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures Her Majesty's Government are taking through the benefits system to support two-parent families with only one wage earner; and if he will make a statement. [63190]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 11 January 1999]: The Secretary of State for Social Security announced a number of measures in his statement on 28 October 1998 including the largest ever increase in Child Benefit. And the under-11 child premium in Family Credit was increased from November last year—a change which will follow through into the Working Families Tax Credit when it replaces Family Credit from October 1999. The WFTC will be part of the tax system, and because it will begin to be paid through the pay packet from April 2000, it will reinforce the message that "work pays". The WFTC will help make work pay for families on low and middle incomes, around 400,000 more than are currently helped by Family Credit. Many of these families will be couples with only one income, where one parent chooses to stay at home with the children.

Blind Persons's Tax Allowance

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans his Department has to ensure that the audio and Braille versions of the leaflet IR121 "Income Tax and Pensioners" is amended to include a reference to the blind person's tax allowance. [64758]

Dawn Primarolo: I am grateful to the hon. Member for highlighting this omission from the audio and Braille versions of the leaflet IR121, "Income Tax and Pensioners". Both I and the Inland Revenue apologise for any inconvenience this may have caused. The Inland Revenue updates all its leaflets periodically, and will ensure that a reference to the blind person's allowance is included in the audio and Braille versions of leaflet IR121 when they are next revised.

Diesel Duty

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what pressure he is applying to bring duty levels on diesel in other EU countries up to the level currently applicable within the United Kingdom. [64985]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 12 January 1999]: The Government continue to press for increases in the EU minimum rates for road fuels to reduce the price differentials between Member States and fully support the adoption of higher minimum diesel duty rates as part of the proposed Energy Products Directive.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact on the UK road haulage industry of the differences in rates of duty on diesel between EU states. [65027]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 12 January 1999]: I have made no assessment of the impact on the UK road haulage industry of the difference in rates of duty between EU states. However, when considering the impact of taxation on the industry it is necessary to take account of the overall taxation burden, which is lower in the UK than that of our major EU competitors.

Mr. Charles Whelan

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the reasons for the planned departure of his Press Secretary, Mr. Charles Whelan; and what is Mr. Whelan's expected date of departure from the Treasury. [65700]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) when he expects his Special Adviser, Mr. Charlie Whelan, to resign; [65515]

(2) if he will set out the severance pay arrangements for his Special Adviser, Mr. Charlie Whelan; [65518]

(3) what safeguards he is putting in place to ensure that his Special Adviser, Mr. Charlie Whelan, will not be able to make use of his knowledge of confidential policy matters when he takes up new employment; [65513]

(4) if his Special Adviser, Mr. Charlie Whelan, has access to confidential Budget policy papers. [65514]

Mr. Gordon Brown: The normal rules applying to those leaving the Civil Service will apply to Mr. Whelan, who has resigned from his post.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will answer the letter dated 5 October 1998 from the right hon. Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) addressed to the last Paymaster General about the additional cost to the taxpayer of the funding method chosen for the Channel Tunnel Rail Link. [65620]

Mr. Milburn: I have done so today.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Document Storage

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department's premises are being used to store documents removed from the Government Whips Office in July 1998; and if he will make a statement. [64551]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 11 January 1999]: The only documents removed from the Government Whips Office in July 1998 were personal. Some of those documents are stored in the Department.

Computer Equipment (Government Chief Whip's Office)

Mr. Page: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under what authority a payment was made by his Department to the Government Chief Whip's Office; and what the reasons were for the payment. [64321]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 17 December 1998]: My Special Advisers brought two laptop computers with them from the Whips' Office when they moved across to MAFF on 27 July. In accordance with normal practice, the Chief Whip's Office billed MAFF for the transfer of the equipment.

Mr. Page: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what payment has been made by his Department to the Government Chief Whip's Office; and what was the sum involved. [64320]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 17 December 1998]: A total payment of £11,207.23, including VAT, has been made by my Department to the Government Chief Whip's Office for the transfer of two laptop computers.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which (a) Ministers, (b) civil servants, (c) advisers and (d) others were responsible for moving the computer equipment to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, from the Government Whips Office in July 1998; on what day the equipment arrived at the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food; and if he will make a statement. [64548]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 11 January 1999]: My Special Advisers brought their laptops with them on the day they joined me at MAFF on 27 July 1998.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which members of his Department have been assigned the computer equipment which was transferred to his Department from the Government Whips Office in July 1998; and if he will make a statement. [64550]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 11 January 1999]: My Special Advisers have retained the use of the two laptop computers they brought with them from the Government Whips Office in July.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the computer equipment transferred from the Government Whips Office to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in July 1998; and if he will estimate the (a) purchase cost and (b) current market value of the equipment. [64544]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 11 January 1999]: Two Toshiba Tecra 730X laptop computers, including CD ROM Drives, 48Mb RAM memory cards, PC modem cards, internet/modem and power leads, together with their carry cases transferred across from the Government Whips Office to MAFF with my Special Advisers in July. The original purchase cost of this equipment was £8,431.78. This figure is inclusive of VAT but does not include software installation costs. The estimated current market value of the equipment would be around £6,400.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) which (a) Ministers and (b) officials in his Department authorised the transfer of computer equipment from the Government Whips Office to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, in July 1998; and on which date such authorisation was made; [64545]

(2) which Ministers and officials in (a) the Government Whips Office and (b) the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food negotiated the (i) transfer date and (ii) purchase price of the computer equipment transferred from the Government Whips Office to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, in July 1998; on what date such details were agreed; and if he will make a statement. [64546]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 11 January 1999]: Arrangements for the transfer of two laptop computers from the Whips office to MAFF, and their replacement with the latest, equivalent machines, were made between my Private Office and the Chief Whips Private Office according to standard procedure. The agreed bill was £9,738.48 for the new equipment and £1,468.75 for software installation costs. Both figures are inclusive of VAT. The relevant invoices were dealt with on receipt on 17 September and 15 October respectively.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what remedial work has been carried out on behalf of his Department on the computer equipment transferred from the Government Whips Office to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in July 1998; and if he will make a statement. [64547]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 11 January 1999]: None.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the adequacy of computer equipment in his Department. [64549]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 11 January 1999]: My Department is equipped with office and IT systems, designed to enable efficient delivery of services in line with Departmental objectives. The capability and performance of our computer equipment is kept under constant review to ensure that it is fit for the departmental purposes on which it is deployed. Significant upgrades are planned in some areas for 1999, particularly in MAFF's Regional Service Centres.

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the costs of enforcing specified risk material controls in licensed slaughterhouses and cutting plants. [66118]

Mr. Nick Brown: My colleagues and I have carefully considered the cost of enforcement of these controls. We have reluctantly concluded that we can no longer defer the introduction of charges to the industry to cover these costs and that they must be transferred from taxpayers to the industry from 29 March 1999.

SRM controls are in the fundamental interest of the industry since, by protecting animal and public health from the risk of BSE and related diseases, they enhance consumer confidence and so bolster demand for meat and meat products.

Interested parties are being consulted on the details of the necessary legislation and a copy of the consultation package has been placed in the Library of the House. Comments are required by 12 February 1999.

Farmers

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assistance is being provided for farmers to diversify and to generate income from new sources. [65707]

Mr. Morley: Funding to encourage a wide range of agricultural activities, including farm diversification, is available in the six areas designated to receive assistance under the English Objective 5b Structural Fund Programmes. No grant aid for farm diversification is available outside these areas. However, in order to assist farmers in developing successful diversified enterprises, the Ministry has produced a series of advisory booklets on farm diversification.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what incentives and support his Department is providing to farmers to pursue an agri-environmentally friendly farming policy. [65706]

Mr. Morley: MAFF operates a wide ranging package of voluntary environmental schemes aimed at encouraging farmers to conserve the countryside and its wildlife. Financial provision for England's agri-environment programme this year is £82 million. Following the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review we have announced that we aim to expand the areas protected and enhanced under the agri-environment schemes. During the next three years an additional £40 million will be available in England for improvements and enhancements to these schemes.

Through ADAS and the Farming and Wildlife Advisory Group, MAFF also funds free initial advice to farmers in England on all aspects of conservation, farm woodland and set-aside. The financial provision for advice this year is over £1 million.

Revised Codes of Good Agricultural Practice for the Protection of Water, Air and Soil, together with a new summary leaflet, were launched in October 1998. The Codes are designed to provide clear, practical advice to farmers and represent the industry standard of good practice for the prevention of agricultural pollution.

US Beef Exports

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of allegations of the National Association of Federal Veterinarians that some US vets have been pressurised to certify US beef for export as free from symptoms of central nervous system diseases in a manner contrary to EU regulations; and if he will make a statement. [64830]

Mr. Rooker: The Chief Veterinary Officer has written to his counterpart in the United States seeking his comments on the allegations in the October edition of the "Federal Veterinarian" publication. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as a response is received.

Badgers

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to publish the research carried out by his Department's laboratories into levels of trace elements in the livers of badgers. [64980]

Mr. Rooker: The relatively small number of badger livers (343) analysed in this limited study do not yield results sufficiently robust to be of interest to a scientific journal. The results will, therefore, not be published. They are being written up and will be made available on request. I shall place a copy in the Library.

Condensate Spreading

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to end the practice of spreading condensate on grazing land. [65295]

Mr. Rooker: The Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee has considered the practice of spreading rendering condensate on fields. The Committee noted the difficulty of establishing the origin of any ruminant protein found in condensate and concluded that spreading condensate on fields where cattle might graze should be prohibited. The Committee's concerns were related to the risk from BSE to animal rather than human health.

Renderers will be advised that the presence of ruminant protein in condensate means that the practice of spreading it contravenes the Fertilisers (Mammalian Meat and Bone Meal) Regulations 1998. This legislation contains the specific offence of spreading material containing protein on agricultural land and is enforced by the appropriate local authority.

Cattle (Trace Element Deficiencies)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to publish the preliminary findings into trace element deficiencies in cattle piloted in the epidemiological investigation survey during November. [64845]

Mr. Rooker: The purpose of this pilot study was to assess how well the new epidemiological questionnaire would perform in the field prior to its being introduced on a national basis. It was never the intention to analyse the data collected; indeed, the sample size of 36 farms is such that any analysis would be unlikely to yield reliable results.

Quarantine

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the recommendations in Professor Kennedy's report, "Quarantine and Rabies-A Reappraisal", which would require primary legislation; and if he will make a statement; [65502]

(2) what representations he has received on implementing the proposed changes to the quarantine laws by (a) primary and (b) secondary legislation; and if he will make a statement. [65503]

Mr. Rooker: I have received a paper from Passports for Pets expressing the view that all of the Advisory Group's recommendations can be implemented by secondary legislation. My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will be meeting Passports for Pets on 25 January to hear their views.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to publish a consultation paper relating to the Animal Health (Amendment) Act 1998; and when he expects the Act to come into force. [65504]

Mr. Rooker: The Act came into force on 21 July 1998. No order has been made yet. The Government are currently considering the responses to consultation on the Kennedy Report on Rabies Quarantine. We expect a separate consultation on animal welfare matters and quarantine premises to follow during the Spring. An Order, under Section 10 of the Animal Health Act 1981 would follow this.

Tobacco Farmers

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ensure the removal of the subsidy provided to tobacco farmers in Europe. [65705]

Mr. Rooker: The Government strongly disapprove of the Common Agricultural Policy support regime for tobacco and would like to see an end to it. We believe that the Community should progressively disengage from support for tobacco production, on grounds of health and cost. Following the reform of the regime agreed in June last year we continue to press for further amendments. However, such further reform would require the support of a qualified majority in the Agriculture Council.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the rates of pay for people on St. Helena paid from Government funds for the last 10 years for which figures are available. [65790]

Clare Short: The table lists the average pay per annum, over the last 10 years, for our Technical Co-operation and Overseas Service Aid Scheme officers in St. Helena. Other allowances have not been included as they vary over time and by individual circumstances.

Nicaragua and Honduras

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what are the current arrangements for repayments of debts by Nicaragua and Honduras to the British Government. [65338]

Ms Hewitt: I have been asked to reply.

At the Paris Club meeting on 9 December the UK agreed to grant a three year moratorium on debt service payments from Nicaragua. Nicaragua need not make any payments to the UK Government before 2001. The government have already cancelled all debts owed to the UK by Honduras.

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the current amount of debt owed to Britain by Nicaragua and Honduras. [65337]

Ms Hewitt: I have been asked to reply.

ECGD is owed some £1 million by Nicaragua. The Government had already forgiven all debts owed to the UK by Honduras before Hurricane Mitch struck.

WALES

Small and Medium Enterprises

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of new small and medium enterprises which were set up in each county in Wales for each of the past 10 years. [65417]

Mr. Hain: There are no estimates available centrally of the number of small or medium enterprises that have been set up in each county.

However, the Department of Trade and Industry publishes estimates of the number of enterprises registering for VAT, which serve as a guide to the pattern of business start-ups. The following table shows the number of VAT registrations from 1994 to 1997, for unitary authorities in Wales. Information prior to 1994 is available only for the former Welsh county structure.

Department of Trade and Industry

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of small and medium enterprises which went out of business in each county of Wales for each of the past 10 years. [65416]

Mr. Hain: There are no estimates available centrally of the number of small or medium enterprises that have gone out of business in each county.

However, the Department of Trade and Industry publishes estimates of the number of enterprises de-registering for VAT, which serve as a guide to the pattern of business closures. The following table shows the number of VAT de-registrations from 1994 to 1997, for unitary authorities in Wales. Information prior to 1994 is available only for the former Welsh county structure.

European Grants (Rhuddlan)

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number and types of audit available to his Department to ensure that European funding is properly spent, indicating how many of the audits were used to monitor European grants to the ex-Rhuddlan Borough Council between 1988 and 1996; and if he will make a statement. [65412]

Mr. Hain: Prime responsibility for the management and control of approved projects rests with the project sponsor.

In the case of Rhuddlan Borough Council they would have had their own internal audit review systems, and these would have been subject to annual external audit by auditors appointed by the Audit Commission.

The Welsh Office relies upon certificates provided by external auditors, which would have been the case with the former Rhuddlan Borough Council, and these attest to the accuracy of the final claims submitted in respect of each project.

The Department undertakes site visits to assess progress. Rhuddlan Borough Council was visited in 1992 and 1994.

The European Court of Auditors also undertakes independent visits. Rhuddlan Borough Council was visited in 1993 and 1995.

The Welsh Office's own systems of control and payments are subject to internal audit review and examination by the Comptroller and Auditor-General.

Inward Investment

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his action to promote inward investment into Wales; and if he must seek the approval of the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry before making any offer to a potential investor. [66136]

Mr. Hain: We continue to create an attractive commercial and economic environment for indigenous as well as inward investing companies. My right hon. Friend will be leading an inward investment mission to North America in the Spring, hosting events for inward investors, promoting Wales generally and meeting potential investors to further Wales' prospects of even greater success. These activities are in addition to the work undertaken by the strengthened Welsh Development Agency and other bodies in Wales.

Although there is no requirement to seek the approval of the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry before making offers of support to potential investors, offers of assistance are subject to inter-Departmentally agreed rules designed to ensure appropriate co-ordination of assistance offered across the UK. These rules are currently being revised to reflect the devolution settlements and the revised arrangements will be set out in a concordat on financial assistance to industry, which we hope to publish shortly.

Bus Services

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the public funding for rural and urban bus services in each county of Wales over the next three years. [66179]

Mr. Hain: For 1999–2000, I am making £5 million available to local authorities in bus subsidy grant, which is in addition to the support for socially necessary services provided by local authorities out of their unhypothecated resources. Of the £5 million, £3 million must be spent on support for rural bus services, with local authorities free to decide whether to spend the remaining £2 million on either rural or urban services. I am currently consulting on the distribution formulae used to allocate the grant to individual local authorities, and I will be announcing the allocations shortly.

Health Trust Reorganisation

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the savings which will result from health trust reorganisation in each of the first three years after implementation. [66366]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The net (cost) savings for the first 3 years have been estimated as follows:

Year	£000
1999–2000	(4,860)
2000–01	3,100
2001–02	6,320

These figures are indicative as total costs depend heavily on exact details of redundancies which are yet to be established. Therefore, 1999–2000 costs may be reduced.

Net savings are expected to rise to around £7 million per annum within 6 years.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Driving Tests

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what factors were used by the Driving Standards Agency to determine acceptable distances for customers to travel to other driving test centres following the closure of their local facility. [65351]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We consider what would be reasonable distances for customers to travel to take their test, based on information from customer surveys, analyses of the postcodes of test candidates, and in the light of experience gained from establishing the new network of driving theory tests centres. In general, candidates should not have to travel further than 7 miles in administrative districts with a population density of 1,250 or more persons per sq. k, 30 miles in districts with a population density of fewer than 100 persons per sq. k, and 20 miles elsewhere.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what factors have resulted in changes in the criteria for the closure of driving test centres over the past 10 years. [65355]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The criteria of operational suitability, cost efficiency and a safe environment for staff and customers have remained unchanged during the period. However, the fall in demand for driving tests during the 1990s has resulted in a need to rationalise the estate to reduce overcapacity, which would otherwise be a burden upon costs and therefore test fees. As part of this process, we have established guidelines for the maximum a candidate should have to travel to a test centre: 7 miles in administrative districts with a population density of 1,250 or more persons per sq. k, 30 miles in districts with a population density of fewer than 100 persons per sq. k, and 20 miles elsewhere.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the consultative process prior to closure of driving test centres is used in all cases. [65350]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Yes, except when we have to close a test centre temporarily or at short notice, owing to health and safety, or operational reasons. In such cases, consultation before closure may not be possible. The Driving Standards Agency gives as much notice as possible to interested parties about a closure and the alternative arrangements that are being made.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what savings have resulted from the closure of driving test centres in each year since the inception of the Driving Standards Agency; and what future savings resulting from closures of driving test centres have been planned for. [65356]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Driving Standards Agency estimates that, since the start of the 1993 financial year, savings in rent and rates payments of £700,000 have accumulated as a result of closures. Figures from before then are not available. There has also been over £1 million of capital receipts from the sale of freehold properties.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what factors have contributed to falls in demand for (a) practical and (b) theory driving tests in each of the regions, with particular reference to the effect of the introduction of the theory test on demand; what assessment the Driving Standards Agency has made of future changes in demand for theory and practical tests; and what steps will be taken to meet changes in demand. [65352]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The key factor underlying the number of candidates coming forward for a driving test is the number of young persons becoming eligible to obtain a driving licence. 54 per cent. of theory test candidates and 55 per cent. of practical test candidates are aged under 20 years.

Overall test demand is also strongly influenced by the pass rate as this affects the number of retests being taken by unsuccessful candidates. The national average pass rate for car theory tests is currently 59 per cent. and 47 per cent. for car practical tests.

The theory test has added another step to the learning to drive process, though it has probably not deterred people altogether. Applications for practical tests reflect the staged-testing process and also a recent fall in the theory test pass rate.

Demand for the practical test may temporarily increase in the first months of this year as candidates try to pass before the introduction of the longer practical test in the Spring, with an offsetting decrease afterwards, but in the longer term returning to recent levels.

No special regional factors have been identified.

The Driving Standards Agency has introduced more flexible staffing arrangements to cope with fluctuations in demand.

Maritime and Coastguard Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of (a) the extent to which the proposed installation of digital technology for the Coastguard Service will provide a fully integrated service that is year 2000 compliant and (b) the adequacy of consultation with end users prior to introducing such new technology for the Coastguard Service. [65264]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The draft Statement of Service Requirements (SSR) which is shortly to be issued to prospective suppliers contains the following statement:

> "All equipment and associated systems supplied for Integrated Coastguard Communication System (ICCS) must be millennium proof. By this we mean that equipment installed before the end of the century must be capable of an uninterrupted transition from 1990 to 2000 dates without subsequent adjustment. Likewise, all equipment installed after January 2000 must be capable of working effectively with both pre and post millennium dates.
> It is anticipated that this is most likely to be an issue in relation to the aural recording and retrieval features. Special assurance is required that where recordings are made prior to midnight on 31 December 1999 or through midnight, they are capable of seamless retrieval after that date".

However, it is proposed that the first operational ICCS equipment will be installed after January 2000.

End users have been involved in the ICCS project from its inception. The statement requirements for ICCS was drawn up by a group chaired by the former Coastguard Agency's Chief Technical Officer which included operational coastguard representation. Prior to that there had been an internal Agency review of requirements compiled by another group which also included several operational Coastguards. The outline ICCS proposals also formed part of the 5 year strategy document which was distributed to all Agency staff in January 1998.

Sporting Facilities

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress he has made in considering means to prevent owners from deliberately running down or demolishing sporting facilities following the court's decision in the Thames Ditton Lawn Tennis Club case. [65428]

Mr. Raynsford: We have received representations to strengthen planning controls over the demolition of various types of sports facilities. We are currently considering these and hope to announce the outcome shortly. We shall consult on any proposed changes to the existing planning arrangements.

Road Safety (Mobile Telephones)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will establish a campaign to reduce the number of accidents caused by drivers using mobile telephones. [65494]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In March 1998, the Government launched a publicity campaign consisting of newspaper advertisements and an advisory leaflet designed to make clear to motorists the dangers of using mobile phones while driving. The advisory leaflet is used by police and road safety officers in their safety campaigns.

Land Supply and Housing

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the research into the land supply and housing demand model, undertaken by the Government Office for London and the South East and the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, will be published. [65654]

Mr. Raynsford: The Report, "Housing in the South East: The inter-relationship between supply, demand and land use policy", will be published shortly.

Roads Review

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the (a) new roads and (b) road improvement projects which were announced in the roads review for which the statutory undertaker plans to apply for funding support from the EU. [65479]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The bids put forward by the Highways Agency for funding in 1999 relate to route management strategies and telematics projects. The European Commission is considering these at present. New roads and road improvement projects announced in the Roads Review will be considered, when appropriate, for bids in future years.

Traffic Calming

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has undertaken on the effects of traffic-calming methods on (a) emergency vehicles and (b) public transport vehicles, with particular reference to low-deck vehicles; and if he will make a statement. [65675]

Ms Glenda Jackson: All research commissioned by my Department into the design and performance of traffic calming measures has included an examination of the effects such measures will have on emergency vehicles and public transport. This research has included three track trials by the Transport Research Laboratory of road humps and chicanes where passenger comfort, operating speeds and performance of vehicles have been examined. Single deck 'low floor' buses have been included in the most recent track trial. No difficulties were experienced in negotiating the different types of 75mm high road humps comprising the trial for speeds up to 25 mph. Operationally, much lower speeds would be recommended to avoid discomfort to passengers.

Oil Discharges

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to apprehend and punish ships making illegal discharges of oil off the British coast; and if he will make a statement. [65571]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Maritime and Coastguard Agency (MCA) has a dedicated Enforcement Unit based at its headquarters in Southampton.

The Unit is charged to investigate all offences under the Merchant Shipping legislation and this includes pollution offences. In less than 11 months since the formation of this Unit, 7 shipowners have been convicted for pollution offences.

The UK and its European partners co-ordinate surveillance and detection of suspected polluters using sophisticated technology. Under the UK Regulations, ships suspected of pollution can be detained in port pending investigation.

Since September 1997, the maximum fine before Magistrates for pollution from ships was raised to £250,000. The maximum fine before the Crown Court is unlimited.

The MCA is committed to vigorously enforcing the anti-pollution legislation and will not hesitate to prosecute offenders whenever appropriate.

Underground Drainage

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if it is his policy that it be a requirement of all industry standards and the Building Regulations that sewerage and drainage pipes should not be split or otherwise damaged as the result of cleaning activities. [65888]

Mr. Raynsford: The development of standards for construction products, including drainage pipes, is a matter for the British Standards Institution in co-operation with European standards bodies. More detailed specifications for sewerage pipes are developed by the water industry, as was indicated in an answer on 7 July 1998, Official Report, columns 480–81, to a Written Question from the hon. Member for Lichfield (Mr. Fabricant). These standards are not formally endorsed by my Department and are thus not subject to Government policy.

Regulation 7 of the Building Regulations requires that building work which is subject to the Regulations should be carried out using proper materials which are appropriate for the circumstances in which they are used. As the blockage of a drain or sewer can be anticipated at some time during their lifetime, it is not unreasonable to expect the pipe to be able to withstand normal cleaning activities.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will raise the standards for pipes used for underground drainage in the review of Part H of the Building Regulations to ensure they are not vulnerable to damage from (a) conventional rodding and (b) high pressure jetting. [65890]

Mr. Raynsford: The current review of Part H of the Building Regulations will consider the need for advice to ensure that pipes used for underground drainage are not vulnerable to damage during cleaning operations.

The Building Regulations are functional in nature, and do not specify standards for building materials. However, the Approved Document to Part H, which gives guidance on ways in which to achieve compliance with the Regulations, makes reference to British Standards saying any material conforming to the Standards listed may be used for below ground drainage. At this early stage in the review it cannot be said whether or not the listing will need to be amended.

Building Regulations

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the review of Part H of the Building Regulations will be concluded. [65889]

Mr. Raynsford: The review of Part H of the Building Regulations commenced last year with the preparation of outline proposals for issues which need to be addressed in the review. These proposals will be considered by the Building Regulations Advisory Committee (BRAC) at their next meeting in February following which officials in my Department will prepare detailed proposals for their consideration later in the year.

Proposals for amendments will subsequently be subject to full consultation as required by Section 14 of the Building Act 1984. The papers for this should be ready towards the end of this year, and the subsequent period of consultation will be 3 months. The proposals will be re-considered by BRAC in the light of comments made during consultation and, if found necessary, amendments will be made to the Approved Document to Part H and, possibly, the Building Regulations. The review should thus be complete by the end of next year.

Emissions

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his plans to reduce UK emissions of carbon dioxide by 20 per cent. on 1990's total by the year 2010. [66041]

Mr. Meale: On 26 October 1998, the Government published a consultation paper on climate change. The paper describes progress to date in reducing greenhouse gas emissions in the UK and sets out a variety of policy options for meeting our climate change targets. It covers both the UK's legally binding target from Kyoto of a 12.5 per cent. reduction in a basket of six greenhouse gases by 2008–2012 and our domestic goal of a 20 per cent. reduction in carbon dioxide emissions by 2010. Following the consultation period which closes on 12 February 1999, we will develop and consult further on a new UK climate change programme.

Private Hire Vehicles

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has following the case in the Queen's Bench Division between L. Benson and Copeland Borough Council to seek to restore the previous position whereby the spouse of a licence holder could use a private hire vehicle for any purpose other than for hire. [65872]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government consulted on options for broadening eligibility to drive licensed private hire vehicles; we are still considering the representations made and the legal issues involved. I hope to make an announcement shortly.

Dog Registration

Mr. Andy King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will establish a national compulsory dog registration scheme. [65875]

Mr. Meale: My Department is holding discussions with a number of animal welfare organisations on the issues surrounding dog registration. A decision on the appropriate way forward will be taken in due course.

Road Accident Fatalities

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list by each police authority area how many people were killed in road accidents between Christmas and the New Year in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [65874]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information requested is shown in the following table for the three years to 1997, the most recent year for which this information is available.

Driving Instructors

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people are (a) registered as approved driving instructors, (b) hold trainee licences and (c) have applications for registration under consideration. [65724]

Ms Glenda Jackson: At the end of November 1998, there were 29,581 Approved Driving Instructors, 921 trainee licence holders, and 17,917 applications for registration.

Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the forthcoming financial, management and policy review of the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution. [66569]

Mr. Meacher: As part of the Government's programme of regular financial, management and policy reviews of non-departmental public bodies, we are to conduct a review of the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution. The review will evaluate the role and performance of the Royal Commission in order to make recommendations on its future development; in particular on the scope, focus and impact of the Commission's inquiries; and on its working methods and resources, and how these are managed. In carrying out the study, my Department will consult widely with relevant organisations and with those who have experience of the Royal Commission's work.

Private Rental Deposits

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made to ensure the safety of private rental deposits; and if he will make a statement. [66436]

Mr. Raynsford: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 7 December 1998, Official Report, column 47.

London Underground

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many London Underground stations operate an exit-only policy between 8 am and 10 am Monday to Fridays; and what are the reasons for their doing so. [66433]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The only station that passengers are currently prevented from entering between 8 and 10 am each Monday to Friday is Chancery Lane. This is because of long-term engineering work on escalators.

However, there are occasions where stations implement what is known as 'station control' for safety reasons, thereby preventing overcrowding on platforms. This is where passengers are prevented from entering the system until platforms have been cleared. This usually lasts for only a few minutes, though in extreme cases, the station may close completely for a short while.

Warsaw Convention (Air Accidents)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the operation of the Warsaw convention in relation to air accidents as it applies to (a) United Kingdom-based airlines and (b) airlines using UK airports; and if he will make a statement. [66394]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Warsaw convention is an agreement relating to international carriage by air. Signed originally in 1929, it has been the subject of a number of amendments which have not necessarily been ratified by all the original signatories. Although the United Kingdom has ratified all the amendments currently in force, the operation of the convention in relation to international carriage performed by foreign airlines using UK airports will depend upon the level of accession to the convention by the foreign airline's country of origin and the airline's conditions of carriage. The convention, as amended by the Hague Protocol 1955, applies in the UK by subordinate legislation to domestic carriage performed by any airline but with numerous modifications, including an uplifting of passenger liability limits. Protocol No. 4 of Montreal 1975 has recently entered into force and provision for implementation, for both international carriage and, with modifications, for domestic carriage, is currently the subject of consultation. I expect two draft Orders in Council for approval by resolution of each House to be laid soon.

To coincide with the entry into force of Council Regulation 2027/97 in October last year, Parliament adopted the Air Carrier Liability Order 1998 which introduced, for the purposes of national legislation giving force to the Warsaw convention for both international and domestic carriage, unlimited liability for passenger claims with strict liability up to 100,000 SDR for United Kingdom and other Community airlines.

The International Civil Aviation Organisation plans to hold a Diplomatic Conference later this year for the purpose of adopting a new convention intended to replace all previous Warsaw instruments and broadly to align the liability provisions with those of the Council Regulation. Officials from my Department have been involved in the development of the new convention and the United Kingdom will participate actively in the Conference.

Government Fleet Vehicles

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many Government fleet vehicles currently run on (a) liquid petroleum gas and (b) naturally compressed gas. [66073]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government currently have 33 vehicles which run on liquid petroleum gas, with another 72 vehicles on order. They also have two vehicles which run on compressed natural gas.

Gas-fuelled Vehicles

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what trials his Department has commissioned into the conversion of heavy goods vehicles and passenger service vehicles to liquid petroleum gas and naturally compressed gas. [66074]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department has kept closely in touch with the work that some operators have done on the advantages and disadvantages of converting heavy goods vehicles and passenger service vehicles to use road fuel gases, including a number of tests carried out by London Transport Buses. The Cleaner Vehicles Task Force has also set up a sub-group to consider the merits and longer term potential of alternative fuels. The Energy Saving Trust's Powershift programme, funded by the Government, provides grants towards alternatively fuelled vehicles, and the costs and performance of vehicles purchased under the scheme are monitored and evaluated.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what initiatives the Government have taken for the conversion of local government vehicles to naturally compressed gas and liquid petroleum gas; and how many local authorities have taken advantage of this. [66075]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Energy Saving Trust's Powershift programme, funded by the Government, provides grants towards alternatively fuelled vehicles including those running on road fuel gases. 73 local authorities have so far benefited from Powershift grants for gas vehicles. My Department has also funded the first stage of the ALTER (Alternative Traffic in Towns) project which is a Europe-wide initiative that encourages local administrations to purchase clean vehicles and to convert existing vehicles to cleaner fuels. To date 32 cities, towns and counties in the UK have signed up to this initiative.

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will take steps to ensure that people are able to travel on the west coast Mainline without having to pre-book seats. [66077]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Franchising Director regulates Virgin's Saver and Weekly Season Tickets. Virgin cannot require these tickets to be pre-booked and must make provision to accommodate demand for these types of ticket in their train services without allowing overcrowding to occur. For tickets which are unregulated Virgin is free to impose pre-booking as a condition of sale.

Cycle Routes

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue national guidance on the paint colours to be used for cycle routes by local authorities. [66117]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Coloured road surfaces have no meaning in law, and are not prescribed in the current Traffic Signs Regulations and General Directions (TSRGD). However, coloured surfaces are commonly used to give prominence to a section of the carriageway set aside for a particular purpose. In the case of cycle lanes, my Department is considering including guidance in the new Local Transport Note on Signs for Cycle Facilities to be published after the new TSRGD is published later this year. The Highways Agency will also be publishing its own general guidance—Coloured Surfacing in Road Layouts (Excluding Traffic Calming)—in February, and this will include some advice on the use of coloured surfaces for cycle lanes.

Waste Management

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to amend the United Kingdom Management Plan for Exports and Imports of Waste. [65804]

Mr. Meale: The UK policies on exports and imports of waste are set out in the "United Kingdom Management Plan for Exports and Imports of Waste", which was published on 16 May 1996. The Plan came into effect on 1 June 1996.

Under the Plan imports of waste from European Community Member States, with the exception of Ireland and Portugal, for disposal by high temperature incineration are being progressively phased out under an annual quota. The quota is due to expire on 31 May 1999.

There is, at present, an apparent inconsistency over whether waste imported under the quota needs to be disposed of, or simply imported into the UK, by 31 May 1999. Following public consultation on this issue, my Department today placed in the Library of both Houses an amendment to the Plan, making it clear that the waste must arrive at the appropriate disposal facility by 31 May 1999. This amendment will come into effect on Tuesday 19 January 1999.

Land Use

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will instruct local authorities to keep registers of all brownfield sites in their districts indicating (i) dormant, (ii) derelict, (iii) vacant, (iv) underused and (v) underutilised land in (a) public and (b) private ownership. [66108]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government are now in the process of setting up the National Land Use Database. This will provide a comprehensive national picture of previously developed sites, including derelict land and vacant buildings, which may be available for development. First stage results are expected by the end of March. A copy of the specification for the database, listing the types and characteristics of the sites covered, has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue planning policy guidance to local planning authorities to consider refusal of planning applications for greenfield site developments until they are satisfied that brownfield sites have been fully utilised. [66107]

Mr. Raynsford: The priority to be given to the use of previously developed greenfield sites for housing will be considered in the draft revision of Planning Policy Guidance note on Housing (PPG3) which will be issued for consultation shortly.

Yachts (Registration)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reason yachts registered under the Merchant Navy Act 1894 must be re-registered every five years. [66361]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The previous registration regulations were largely based upon the Merchant Shipping Act 1894 and so represented the requirements for registration at that time. Unfortunately there was no provision for deleting vessels from the register, unless notified by the owner, where they had been sold to a foreign owner. More importantly, ships that were sunk could not be removed either. Over time this meant that many ships remained on the register when in fact they did not exist. Additionally, owners have not always updated their address when they moved which has resulted in out of date information being held.

The new regulations aim to keep the data more accurate whilst minimising the effect upon owners. An up to date register will be easier to administer and enable us to transfer all relevant records to our computer database without the additional cost involved in transferring redundant information. This in turn will enable us to keep registration costs as low as possible. We will also have accurate records to assist Coastguards in an emergency and will be able to confirm current ownership quickly if registered owners find themselves in difficulty in foreign ports. Finally, it will enable us to discharge our international obligation to maintain the register more effectively and provide data to those that require it i.e. transcripts, etc., in an improved and efficient manner.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what plans he has to reduce his Department's payments to the Export Credits Guarantee Department; [65000]

(2) if he will provide a breakdown of the £42 million expenditure from his Department to the Export Credits Guarantee Department. [64999]

Mr. Spellar: Since 1986–87 the Ministry of Defence has made contributions to the ECGD. The main purpose of these payments has been to provide interest rate support for defence exports to Jordan. Additionally, in the years 1986–87 to 1988–89, payments were made to ECGD to provide interest rate support for Oman. The contributions are as follows:

No further contributions are due after 1999–2000.

BBC (Iraq Coverage)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he had with the BBC concerning the BBC's handling of the Iraq conflict; and if he will make a statement. [65645]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 14 January 1999]: The Government were concerned to ensure that the British public were provided with factual and balanced reporting of Operation Desert Fox. Journalists reporting from Baghdad were, and are, subject to considerable restrictions on access and information. It was particularly important, therefore, that live coverage of and commentary on Operation Desert Fox from Iraq should explain, and take account of, such restrictions. This was made clear to media representatives, including in the BBC, on a number of occasions.

Submarines

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the crew number of the (a) Trafalgar and (b) Vanguard class of submarines. [65739]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Ship's Company of a Trafalgar class submarine consists of 16 Officers, 53 Senior Ratings and 62 Junior Ratings, a total of 131.

There are currently two crewing methods for the Vanguard class submarine: boats either have two crews or a single augmented (gold) crew. Two of the Vanguard class have gold crews, the other two have two crews each, known as hybrid manning. The single Vanguard crew is 142 people, consisting of 18 Officers, 60 Senior Ratings and 64 Junior Ratings. The augmented, or gold, crew is 202 people, comprising 21 Officers, 80 Senior Ratings and 101 Junior Ratings.

Defence Medical Services

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of his Department's review of MOD medical services. [65743]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Defence Medical Services (DMS) Study Team comprised four military officers, including representation from all three Services, and two civil servants. The study work formed part of their normal duties and there were therefore no additional staffing costs to the defence budget. Travel and subsistence costs incurred by the team amounted to some £1,000.

The team's conclusions and the Defence Secretary's vision for the future were published in a booklet sent to every member of the DMS. Printing costs totalled some £9,672.

Future Head Office

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the budget for the refurbishing of his Department's Future Head Office. [65627]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 14 January 1999]: The project to redevelop the Ministry of Defence Main Building in Whitehall is being undertaken as a Public Private Partnership scheme. The Amey/Hyder/Kvaerner consortium was appointed as the preferred bidder on 8 January 1999. The cost of the programme is commercially sensitive until final negotiations are concluded with the preferred bidder. I will provide cost information when a contract has been signed.

DERA

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many patents are held by DERA; and what value his Department places on DERA's patent portfolio. [65631]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 14 January 1999]: DERA currently has patents or patent applications on approximately 1,050 inventions, some of which are held jointly with another party. Most are held in a number of countries, giving a total of approximately 3,300 granted patents and 2,400 pending applications. Work is in hand in MOD, as part of the DERA PPP options study, to ensure that the proposed solution protects the value of these to MOD in the long term.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to make a decision about the future of DERA. [65630]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 14 January 1999]: My noble Friend the Minister for Defence Procurement, Lord Gilbert, expects initial advice from a team studying the options around the end of March. Following further internal discussions and consultation with colleagues, we would hope to make a decision later this year.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage golden share his Department will maintain in the reorganised DERA. [65632]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 14 January 1999]: Following advice from the MOD team studying the options, we hope to make a decision about the future of DERA later this year. However, until then, and until options have been fully explored, it is impossible to predict what arrangements will be necessary.

Controlled Substances (Emissions)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the letter of 3 October 1998 (D/Min/DP/Jb3521/98/M) from the Minister for Defence Procurement to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, what progress was made in 1998 by his Department in reducing its use of controlled substances under the Montreal Protocol whenever acceptable alternatives were available, and to minimising emissions of materials where they must still be used; and if he will provide specific examples. [65388]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence has programmes in place, where technically feasible, to convert equipment and facilities to use materials that do not deplete the ozone layer. However, owing to the complexity and inevitable length of these programmes, the progress made during 1998 should be seen in the context of longer-term developments.

The Royal Navy has reduced the total installed charge of CFC-12, used in marine refrigeration and air conditioning systems, from 40 tonnes at the beginning of 1996 to 8 tonnes by the end of 1998. New refrigeration equipment was procured last year to enable the conversion of the remaining surface vessels by the end of 1999 and the conversion program for the Trafalgar class submarines was started. During 1998, the Army continued trials of alternatives to halon fire extinguishants for use in armoured vehicle engine compartments and two alternative refrigerants are being evaluated for specific vehicle applications. The RAF completed a study that identified alternatives to the CFC solvent used in cleaning of oxygen equipment and also eliminated the use of the CFC necessary for the maintenance and testing of the VC10 cabin conditioning equipment. A modification programme was initiated to replace the CFC in refrigerators on the E3 Sentry and is due for completion by the middle of this year.

For applications where no acceptable halon alternatives have been identified, my Department, through the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency, and the Royal Navy continued their research into new chemical fire extinguishants and water mist technologies.

To minimise emissions of the controlled substances, the Royal Navy has procured and is installing high integrity valves and flexible refrigerant hoses for its vessels. A lubricant additive was successfully evaluated, procured and installed in most vessels to assist in the detection of leakages. Competitive tenders for electronic leak detection equipment are currently being assessed, following the successful completion of an evaluation program. All the Services have procured equipment and introduced procedures to recover the materials for recycling during system maintenance. Education and training of users of ozone depleting substances are featured in the comprehensive package of environmental protection courses made available by the RAF to all members of the Department during 1998.

Staff College, Camberley

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Joint Doctrine Centre will move to the buildings of the Staff College, Camberley. [65919]

Mr. Doug Henderson: A number of options are being considered for the location of the Joint Defence Centre but the matter has not yet been put to Ministers.

Mr. Doug Henderson: I am satisfied that there are no substantial grounds to review the decision to transfer the Headquarters of HQ 101 Battalion REME from Chorley TA Centre to Queensferry TA Centre.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the transfer of 101 Battalion HQ REME (V) from Chorley to Queensferry to begin; and what will be the time scale of the transfer. [66071]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Detailed arrangements for the transfer of HQ Battalion REME are still in preparation, with the aim of establishing the Headquarters in Queensferry on 1 July 1999. Some personnel are likely to be retained beyond that date at the TA Centre in Chorley.

RAF Chilmark

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost to date of (a) ordnance and chemical clearance and (b) other preparatory site work in connection with disposal of the former RAF Chilmark. [65429]

Mr. Spellar: The cost to date of ordnance and chemical clearance at the former RAF Chilmark is £1.09m. This is made up of manpower costs, together with the cost of buying and hiring plant and equipment. The preparatory site work to date has cost an additional £0.213m. This has been spent on Land Quality Assessments. These test the condition of the soil and indicate where remediation work is necessary to ensure that the land will be fit for future use.

Chief of the Defence Staff

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the names and current appointments of those senior officers who are being considered for the post of Chief of the Defence Staff. [65745]

Mr. George Robertson: No decision has yet been taken on the retirement date of General Sir Charles Guthrie, the Chief of the Defence Staff.

Falklands War Veterans' Illnesses

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what policies he has to deal with veterans of the Falklands War who suffer from stress-related illness. [65918]

Mr. Spellar: The Armed Forces provide appropriate treatment for serving personnel suffering from stress-related illness, including those who served in the South Atlantic Campaign. The Armed Forces also have a range of measures in place aimed at preventing stress-related illness among serving personnel, with particular attention paid to those deployed on operational or peacekeeping duties. Medical care of ex-Service personnel is the responsibility of the National Health Service.

Gulf Veterans' Illnesses

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to appoint the next Chairman of the Independent Panel which oversees his Department's interactions research programme into Gulf Veterans' Illnesses. [66578]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Professor Donald Davies has agreed to take on the role of Chairman of the Independent Panel overseeing the MOD Interactions research programme. This programme is designed to investigate the possible adverse health effects of the combination of vaccines and tablets which were given to UK troops during the Gulf conflict to protect them against biological and chemical warfare agents. This is an important part of the broader ongoing research programme into Gulf War veterans' illnesses.

Professor Davies is the Director of the Department of Clinical Pharmacology (Division of Medicine) at Imperial College School of Medicine and the Director of the Department of Health Toxicology Unit, located at the same site. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society of Chemistry and the Royal College of Pathologists, and an honorary member of the Royal College of Physicians.

Professor Davies is presently a member of the Committee on Mutagenicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment, and the National Biological Standards Board; he also sits on the expert Panel which advises the European Medicines Evaluation Agency; and he was a member of the Committee on Safety of Medicines until December 1998. We expect that the next meeting of the Independent Panel, the first at which Professor Davies will act as Chairman, will be held shortly.

Mr. Spellar: The number of items of metal which have been excavated in land adjacent to the Defence Nuclear, Biological and Chemical Centre at Winterbourne Gunner is 3,414. Of these, 382 were buried ordnance, 8 were ordnance containing liquid and 3,032 were assorted non-ordnance items.

The items of ordnance containing liquid are currently at the Chemical and Biological Defence Centre at Porton awaiting analysis to determine the nature of the liquid.

Mr. Stephen Kock

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what Mr. Stephen Kock's duties were in connection with DESO between 1987 and 1992. [65143]

Mr. Spellar: None.

Mr. Spellar: I am not aware of any request for such documents having been made by NAO officials in respect of defence export contracts. With the passage of time, however, it is not possible to review all Departmental records.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the relationship was between Mr. Stephen Kock and regiments in the British Army in the period from 1968 to 1995. [65136]

Mr. Spellar: Although Mr. Kock has never served as a member of the British Army, he is a member of the Regimental Association of the Special Air Service, which he joined in 1975 by virtue of his association with the Rhodesian Special Forces. I am not aware of any other association between Mr. Kock and Regiments in the British Army in the period from 1967 to 1995.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role Mr. Stephen Kock played in negotiating, organising and promoting the Al Yamamah deal. [65154]

Mr. Spellar: The MOD is unaware of any involvement in the Al Yamamah programme, either now or in the past, by Mr. Stephen Kock.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what role Mr. Stephen Kock played in the Oman defence deal of 1981; [65155]

(2) what role Mr. Stephen Kock played in negotiating, organising or promoting the Jordan defence package; [65153]

(3) what role Mr. Stephen Kock played in the Indonesian defence deal of 1990; [65156]

(4) what role Mr. Stephen Kock played in negotiating a special forces base in Malaysia in the period 1985 to 1988. [65152]

Mr. Spellar: I am unaware of any role played by Mr. Kock in advising Her Majesty's Government in relation to Mr. Karl Erik Schmitz.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what involvement Mr. Stephen Kock had in the preparations for privatisation of Royal Ordnance between 1984 and 1987. [65137]

Mr. Spellar: The MOD is unaware of any involvement by Mr. Kock in the preparations for the privatisation of Royal Ordnance.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what meetings Mr. Stephen Kock had with Sir James Biyth of DESO to discuss defence sales; [65144]

(2) if he will list the meetings which (a) Sir Peter Levene and (b) Sir Colin Chandler had in their Defence Procurement, Defence Sales and DESO roles with Mr. Stephen Kock. [65134]

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the Ministers with whom he has consulted regarding the proposal to nominate the Atlantic Frontier Continental Shelf as a world heritage site. [64421]

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has Ministerial responsibility for considering responses to the public consultation suggesting that the Atlantic Frontier Continental Shelf should be included in the new Tentative List for the UK of potential World Heritage Sites. Ministers in the Scottish Office have not yet consulted other Ministerial colleagues about this issue, but there has been consultation at official level with the Northern Ireland Office and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Animation Industry

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what support is given to the animation industry in the United Kingdom by his Department. [65714]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 14 January 1999]: Total support from the National Lottery for production of animated films is £1,374,966 to date. In addition, the Arts Council of England contributes £50,000 per annum to a scheme for experimental animation, which it runs in conjunction with Channel 4.

The British Film Institute, in collaboration with Channel 4, runs two animation schemes, Animation in Residence and the British Animation Training scheme. The National Film and Television School runs a Diploma Course in Animation.

Finally, my Department has granted co-production status to a number of animated films, which has enabled them to access financial benefits in the UK and in other countries.

Tourism

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans his Department has to create new incentives and grants to develop tourist attractions in the UK and create new jobs in the tourism industry. [65717]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 14 January 1999]: New and existing attractions are benefiting from the National Lottery and, in eligible areas of the UK, from the European Regional Development Fund. The new strategy for tourism which we shall be publishing soon, will include action to help the attractions sector, and the tourism industry as a whole, maximise its potential to create jobs.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what percentage of jobs in the north-west depend on tourism; [65713]

(2) what estimates he has made of the number of people employed in tourism. [65720]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 14 January 1999]: It is estimated that there were 1.8 million self-employment and employee jobs in the tourism-related industries in Great Britain in September 1998.

An estimated 7 per cent. of the total self-employment and employee jobs in the north-west were located within the tourism-related industries in September 1998.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he will estimate the turnover from tourism in the UK in each year for the next five years; [65721]

(2) how much revenue was generated through tourism by overseas visitors in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what estimates he has made of projected turnover for the next five years. [65712]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 14 January 1999]: Tourism by overseas visitors generated an estimated £12.2 billion in the UK in 1997 according to the latest figures from the International Passenger Survey. In the first 10 months of 1998, overseas visitors have spent an estimated £10.8 billion in the UK, a 4 per cent. increase on the amount spent in the equivalent period in 1997.

The Department for Culture, Media and Sport does not make any projections of future turnover from tourism in the UK.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what grants are available to promote the conversion of farmhouses for tourism in the north-west. [65719]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 14 January 1999]: Farm tourism is growing in importance, with a 3 per cent. increase in visitors between 1996 and 1997. In areas where agriculture or traditional industries are in decline, tourism can help economic development and create jobs.

Funding to encourage a wide range of agricultural activities, including the conversion of farmhouses for tourism, is available in the north-west under the Merseyside Objective 1 and the Northern Uplands Objective 5b programmes. Grants are made through the Merseyside Farm Tourism Initiative Project in the Objective 1 designated area and the Northern Uplands Farm Tourism Initiative in the Objective 5b designated area.

In addition, The Redundant Building Grant Scheme, currently operated by the Rural Development Commission, can provide grants for the conversion or refurbishment of redundant buildings to bring them back into productive business use or to enhance their current business use.

The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has produced a series of advisory booklets on farm diversification in order to assist farmers in developing successful diversified enterprises.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much revenue and what new grants have been made available to promote tourism in the north-west in 1998. [65718]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 14 January 1999]: The north-west, like all parts of England, benefits from the work of the British Tourist Authority and of the English Tourist Board. For 1998–99, the BTA has a grant of £35 million and the ETB a grant of £9.7 million, of which £292,000 is for the North West Tourist Board. New support structures, announced on 14 December, Official Report, column 352, will ensure more effective use is made of this money in the future, with a greater proportion going to the regions.

Government support for tourism is not limited to the funding of tourist boards. An important part of what makes this country attractive to tourists from home and abroad is our arts, museums and galleries. This year DCMS will spend around £1 billion in support of them.

In addition, tourism in the north-west has benefited, both directly and indirectly, from National Lottery funding (nearly £450 million has gone to the region), and from the European Regional Development Fund.

Increasingly, local authorities, tourist boards and the private sector are working together to promote and develop tourism in their areas and some excellent examples of such partnerships are to be found in the north-west. Our strategy for tourism, to be published next month, will support such initiatives. We shall be putting forward a wide range of action points designed to ensure that tourism delivers benefits for local communities, individual tourists and the economy.

Television Licences (Pensioners)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he will estimate the costs to his Department of reducing the television licence for pensioners to £25; and if he will assess the benefits of introducing this measure; [65716]

(2) if he will estimate the costs to his Department of reducing the television licence for pensioners to £40; and if he will assess the benefits of introducing this measure. [65715]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 14 January 1999]: The estimated cost in lost television licence fee revenue of providing £40 colour television licences for all pensioner only households is £278 million. This would rise to £351 million if the concessionary fee were set at £25 and applied to both colour and black and white licences. The Government have no plans at present to introduce such concessions.

Millennium Projects

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) how much money, other than from the National Lottery, has been raised for each Millennium Landmark Project to date; [66161]

(2) how much local government funding has been allocated to each Millennium Landmark project; [66405]

(3) how much National Lottery money has been paid for architects' and consultants' fees for each of the Millennium Landmark projects to date; and what is the forecast total cost of each project. [65742]

Mr. Chris Smith: These are matters for the Millennium Commission. I shall reply to the hon. Member in my capacity as Chairman of the Commission, and place copies of my reply in the Library of the House.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will ensure that Millennium Commission funding is made available to projects in each constituency; and if he will list those constituencies which have received funding to date. [65986]

Mr. Chris Smith: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall write to my hon. Friend in my capacity as Chairman of the Commission and place copies of my reply in the Library of the House.

British Film Industry

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what grants are provided by his Department to aid development of the British film industry. [65989]

Janet Anderson: In December my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced an increase in film support of at least £5.5 million over the next three years. The breakdown for 1999–2000 is as follows:

British Film Institute	16,910
British Screen Finance Ltd.	2,000
European Co-production Fund	2,000
British Film Commission	850
National Film and Television School	2,100
Audiovisual Eureka Secretariat and Audiovisual Observatory	393
European Media II	6,200
Other support to the film industry	556

My right hon. Friend also announced the creation of a new strategic body, British Film, which will be a Lottery distributor with its own percentage stream of Lottery money from the arts good cause—guaranteeing, for the first time, a dedicated share of Lottery resources for film. The percentage will be set to ensure British Film receives at least £27,000,000 each year from the Lottery; the figure may well be higher if the numbers playing the Lottery continue as at present.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid (Taxation)

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department how much the Legal Aid Board has paid to the Court Service or other providers for taxation of (a) criminal and (b) civil legal aid cases in the financial year ending April 1995 and in each succeeding financial year. [65664]

Mr. Hoon: No fees are payable from the legal aid fund to the Court Service or other providers for the determination of criminal legal aid bills. Information on the amount paid to the courts for taxation of costs in civil cases is not available as the Legal Aid Board does not record those fees separately.

Defence Case Payments

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to paragraph 35 of the explanatory notes to the Access of Justice Bill [Lords], by what percentage average payments to defence lawyers in the Crown courts increased between 1991–92 and 1997–98; and what was the reason for the size of the increase. [65668]

Mr. Hoon: Overall, between 1991–92 and 1997–98 average payments to lawyers in the Crown Court increased by 66 per cent. including disbursements, 63 per cent. excluding disbursements. Excluding the most exceptional cases, that is the top one per cent. of the most expensive cases, which may distort the overall figures, average payments to defence lawyers in the remaining 99 per cent. of cases increased by 82 per cent. compared with an inflation rate of 18 per cent. over the period. Among the reasons for the increase in average payments in those 99 per cent. of cases are fewer guilty pleas, resulting in more effective trials, and more work claimed per case by defence lawyers.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to paragraph 35 of the explanatory notes to the Access of Justice Bill [Lords], what was the increase in the average payments to defence lawyers in the Magistrates courts over the period 1991–92 to 1997–98; and what was the aggregate rate of inflation over the same period. [65667]

Mr. Hoon: Between 1991–92 and 1997–98 average payments to defence lawyers in the Magistrates Court increased by 11 per cent. inclusive of disbursements, or 12 per cent exclusive of disbursements. Over the same period the aggregate rate of inflation was 18 per cent. However, the introduction of Magistrates Court Standard Fees in June 1993 will have reduced the average payment because more individual payments are being made in respect of the same defendant. For example, payments in respect of Bail Act offences are now paid as a separate fee rather than being included in the payment for the case as a whole.

Bankrupt Legal Practitioners

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department how many practitioners who have been declared bankrupt are permitted to practise as barristers or solicitors in the courts. [65670]

Mr. Hoon: This is a matter for their professional bodies. Neither the Bar Council nor the Law Society have the requested figures readily available.

Legal Services Commission

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what estimate he has made of the administrative costs of the Community Legal Service in each of its first three years of operation; [65662]

(2) what estimate he has made of the administrative costs of the Criminal Defence Service in each of its first three years of operation. [65663]

Mr. Hoon: It is intended that the Legal Services Commission, which initially will administer both the Community Legal Service and the Criminal Defence Service, will be created on 1 January 2000. The administrative costs of the Commission from 1 January to the end of that financial year will be met from the Legal Aid Board's administration budget for the year 1999–2000, which is estimated at £62.4 million. In each of the next two years of its operation, it is estimated that the administrative costs of the Legal Services Commission will be £60.4 million. The Commission's administrative budget will thereafter be reviewed in the light of its workload under the reformed scheme.

Legal Aid (Expenditure)

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to paragraph 35 of the explanatory notes to the Access to Justice Bill [Lords], what were the annual increases in expenditure on legal aid overall in each year from 1991–92 to 1997–98. [65665]

Mr. Hoon: The annual increase in each year was as follows:

Year	£ million	Percentage
1991–92	223	33
1992–93	188	21
1993–94	116	11
1994–95	89	7
1995–96	91	7
1997–98	50	3

Generally, average payments continue to rise at a rate well above inflation. In the last year, for example, the average increase in all categories of legal aid exceeded the inflation rate of 3.3 per cent. and were as follows:

	Percentage
Civil	12.4
Criminal Higher	7.3
Criminal Magistrates	4.4
ABWOR	9.9
Duty Solicitor	4.6
Advice and Assistance	7.1

Graduated Fee Scheme

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the proportion of cases in the Crown courts in which legally aided defences were subject to the graduated fee scheme in each year between 1991–92 and 1997–98. [65669]

Mr. Hoon: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, as a proportion of total expenditure on Crown Court Advocates, and as a proportion of total claims submitted by Crown Court Advocates, the coverage of graduated fees, in 1996–97 and 1997–98, was as follows:

Graduated fees[1]	1996–97	1997–98
Percentage of payments	0.57	59.61
Percentage of expenditure	0.14	24.09

[1] The Graduated Fee Scheme was introduced on 1 January 1997 and covers Crown Court Advocates only. It does not cover Crown Court Litigators.

Magistrates Courts (West Derbyshire)

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he received from Derbyshire Dales District Council about the closure of magistrates courts in West Derbyshire before he made his decision. [65438]

Mr. Hoon: I received nine representations from Derbyshire Dales District Council before a final decision was made to close the courthouses of Ashbourne, Bakewell and Matlock in West Derbyshire.

Civil and Family Case Payments

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to paragraph 35 of the explanatory notes to the Access to Justice Bill [Lords], by what percentage average payments in civil and family cases rose between 1991–92 and 1997–98; and what was the reason for the size of the increase. [65666]

Mr. Hoon: The percentage increase in average payments in each year, was as follows:

Year	Percentage
1993–94	7.8
1994–95	14.7
1995–96	10.1
1996–97	13.3
1997–98	12.4

There is no single factor which explains these increases. However, the main reason is growth in the amount of work claimed per case.

Conditional Fee Agreements

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate he has made of the increased costs of litigation which will arise from the right of lawyers providing representation, pursuant to conditional fee agreements to uplift their costs by up to 100 per cent. in successful cases. [65671]

Mr. Hoon: As the right hon. and learned Gentleman is aware, the maximum uplift allowed in a conditional fee agreement was set at 100 per cent. by his noble and learned Friend Lord Mackay of Clashfern in 1995 in the Conditional Fees Order 1995. I am not aware of any assessment that was made at that time or before the figure was set. We shall be undertaking research and monitoring into the operation of conditional fees and to that end my officials have already begun discussing with the profession and other consumer and interest parties what form this research and monitoring may take.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department how many firms of insurers (a) from the United Kingdom and (b) from overseas have come forward with products to provide legal fees insurance under conditional fee agreements; and if he will list them. [65672]

Mr. Hoon: As I told the hon. Member for North Shropshire (Mr. Paterson) on 3 November 1998, Official Report, column 675, insurance products to underpin conditional fee agreements have been available since July 1995 when conditional fee agreements first became lawful. It is an ever expanding market with new products coming into the market all the time. I am aware of at least eight providers of insurance to underpin conditional fees. I doubt that a comprehensive list exists or can be put together given the vibrant and expanding nature of this market.

Legal Aid (Asylum Seekers)

Mr. Forth: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what has been the total cost of providing legal aid to asylum seekers in (a) asylum cases, (b) criminal cases and (c) other cases in the past three years. [65467]

Mr. Hoon: The information requested is not available. The data collected by the Legal Aid Board and the courts do not identify separately applications made for legal aid by asylum seekers. However the amount paid out for Legal Advice and Assistance in respect of all Immigration and Nationality matters, over the last three years, was as follows:

1996–97	26,146
1997–98	35,218

Judges' Interests

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has for the public registration of judges' interests; and if he will make a statement. [65866]

Mr. Hoon: There are at present no plans to provide for the public registration of judges' interests. However, in relation to the House of Lords in its judicial capacity, the Lord Chancellor has for the future requested the senior Law Lord, or the senior Law Lord in the chair, to ensure that at the time when any Committee is being composed, its proposed members will consider together whether any of their number might appear to be subject to a conflict of interest; and, in order to ensure the impartiality, and the appearance of impartiality of the Committee, to require any Law Lord to disclose any such circumstances to the parties and not sit if any party objects and the Committee so determines.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Homeless People

15. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to improve electoral registration levels among homeless people; and if he will make a statement. [64361]

Mr. George Howarth: The residence requirement which makes it difficult for homeless people to register is about to be reviewed by the Working Party on Electoral Procedures which I chair. The Working Party will be able to make detailed recommendations when it presents its final report to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary later this year.

Police Funding

16. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police forces received a per capita settlement for 1999–2000 larger than that for Lancashire. [64365]

Mr. Straw: Figures for total police force spending in 1999–2000 are not yet available as police authorities have yet to set their budgets. On the basis of provisional Government funding allocations for next year as announced by my right hon. Friend on 2 December 1998, Official Report columns 194–97 only 11 forces out of 43 will have a per capita settlement greater than Lancashire.

Immigration Advisers

17. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to introduce plans to regulate immigration advisers and solicitors. [64366]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government have a manifesto commitment to control unscrupulous immigration advisers whether legally qualified or not. We will introduce legislation shortly.

24. Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has received of poor professional standards among certain immigration advisers and solicitors. [64373]

35. Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has received of poor professional standards among certain immigration advisers and solicitors. [64384]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have received many representations from Members of Parliament as well as evidence from other sources about incompetent or unscrupulous immigration advisers. The Government will regulate advisers in the forthcoming Immigration and Asylum Bill.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take action to regulate immigration advisers. [64363]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Yes. The Government have a manifesto commitment to control unscrupulous immigration advisers. We will introduce legislations shortly.

Young Offenders

19. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he is making in achieving his target of halving the time between young offenders committing an offence and appearing in court. [64368]

Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress is being made in halving the time between serious youth offenders committing a crime and appearing in court. [64357]

Mr. Boateng: In 1996 the average time from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders was 142 days. We are committed to halving that time by March 2002. We took early action on coming to office to begin the process of change.

There are now over 150 fast tracking schemes in operation covering almost half of all courts in England and Wales. Provisions in the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 were brought into force on 30 September last year to enable the courts to manage cases more quickly and efficiently. Other measures are currently being piloted with national implementation planned for October this year.

The Government have set demanding performance targets for all stages of proceedings up to and after trial and for all youth justice agencies.

Probation Service

20. Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the future of the Probation Service. [64369]

Mr. George Howarth: "Joining Forces to Protect the Public" was published on 6 August 1998, and sought views on our plans for modernising the probation services in England and Wales. Also relevant are our proposals set out in the consultation paper, "Support Services in Family Proceedings—Future Organisation of Court Welfare Services", which was published on 30 July. We are now carefully considering the replies received, and expect to announce decisions about the future organisation of these services soon.

Access to Justice Bill

21. Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last had discussions with the Lord Chancellor and the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department, about the consequences of the Access to Justice Bill [Lords] for the Home Office's criminal justice policy. [64370]

Mr. Boateng: I share responsibility for criminal justice policy with my right hon. and noble Friend the Lord Chancellor and my right hon. and Learned Friend the Attorney-General, and relevant matters (including the Access to Justice Bill) are regularly discussed between us. The Bill incorporates a number of measures which are designed to contribute to the Government's policy of making the criminal justice system more efficient and effective.

Channel Islands

22. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with representatives of the administrators in the Channel Islands about their constitutional position. [64371]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. and noble Friend the Lord Williams of Mostyn had discussions on 16 October last year with representatives of the Channel Islands about their constitutional position, with particular reference to the European Union Code of Conduct on Business Taxation.

Voter Participation

23. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on work planned by his Department to encourage higher voter participation in the (a) local and (b) European elections this year. [64372]

Mr. George Howarth: Local elections are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

Several interested organisations are running publicity campaigns for the elections to the European Parliament. In the light of this, we are currently considering how to make the best use of any funds which the Government may be able to provide for voter education purposes.

Youth Crime

25. Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he is making in tackling youth crime; and if he will make a statement. [64374]

Mr. Boateng: The Crime and Disorder Act, which received Royal Assent in July 1998, included a number of new measures to tackle youth crime; other measures to establish youth offender panels are within the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Bill currently before Parliament.

The Government are currently piloting new measures in the Crime and Disorder Act, including the final warning scheme, new community-based court disposals, and youth offending teams with national implementation planned for around April 2000.

To date the Government have also introduced a range of measures to speed up the youth justice system, and have established the Youth Justice Board for England and Wales which will provide advice on the operation and performance of the youth justice system.

Tagging Schemes

26. Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the pilot tagging schemes. [64375]

Mr. George Howarth: Research into the first two years of the pilot schemes of curfew orders enforced by electronic monitoring under the Criminal Justice Act 1991 has been published in Home Office Research Study 163 and 177. Further research into the first two years of the trials is due to be published this year. The other trials of court based electronic monitoring schemes are to be evaluated this year.

Firearms (Compensation)

27. Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the efficiency with which compensatory payments on now-illegal firearms are being made. [64376]

Mr. Boateng: Payments are being made as quickly and efficiently as possible, having regard to the range and complexity of the compensation schemes, and the need for proper scrutiny of claims to ensure propriety and prevent fraud.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current estimate for the completion of option C claims under the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997. [65585]

Mr. Boateng: The aim is to make offers of payment on the remaining Option C claims by the end of March.

I outlined the measures we are taking to speed the processing of these compensation claims in my reply to the hon. Member for Tewksbury (Mr. Robertson) on 28 October 1998, Official Report, columns 179–80.

Sunday Dancing

28. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received regarding Sunday dancing. [64377]

Mr. George Howarth: The British Entertainment and Discotheque Association met me on 16 December 1998 to press the case for relaxing the present restrictions. I also received some letters from members of the public both for and against change. I hope to announce the outcome of my consideration shortly.

Police (Early Retirement)

29. Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he plans to reduce the proportion of early retirements from the police. [64378]

Mr. Boateng: Following our consultation document of last year on police pension arrangements, work is in hand on detailed proposals to improve practice in managing ill-health retirement and to support good management practice with changes to the Police Pensions Regulations where necessary. We plan to publish our proposals in the early part of this year. They will be published in advance of implementation to allow for full consultation with the interested parties.

31. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which police authority had (a) the highest and (b) the lowest rate of early retirement through sickness in the last year for which figures are available. [64380]

Mr. Boateng: In 1997–98 Derbyshire Constabulary had the highest rate of ill-health retirement among police forces in England and Wales, at 65% of all retirements. Surrey Police had the lowest, at 14% of all retirements.

Crime Reduction

32. Siobhain McDonagh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met local authority representatives to discuss initiatives to reduce offending rates in areas of high crime. [64381]

Mr. Straw: As a matter of course, Ministers and officials regularly meet representatives from a wide variety of interests, including local government. We have been grateful for the help given, for example, in the production of the guidance for statutory local crime and disorder partnerships, and in respect of anti-social behaviour orders which will come into force on 1 April 1999.

My Department recently commissioned "Reducing Neighbourhood Crime: a manual for action" from Crime Concern. It provides practical advice for local partners, including local authorities, representatives of which made a valuable contribution to its production.

Under-age Drinking

33. Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning links between under-age drinking and anti-social behaviour in town centres. [64382]

Mr. Boateng: The public, police officers and local councillors have all indicated that alcohol-related crime, disorder and anti-social behaviour are a significant problem and do involve under-age drinkers.

We have implemented the Confiscation of Alcohol (Young Persons) Act 1997 and will legislate to clarify the law relating to adults who buy alcohol for children and to the use of children in test purchases. The Anti-Social Behaviour Order and other provisions in the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 will help with specific local problems.

The police and local authorities will be able to target local problems through the crime reduction strategies required by the Crime and Disorder Act.

Victim Support

34. Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the support provided by his Department for victims of crime. [64383]

Mr. Boateng: The Home Office provides a grant of £12.7 million to the voluntary organisation, Victim Support, to deliver front line services to victims of crime. In 1997–98 such services were offered to more than 1.1 million victims. In 1998–99, a grant was given for the first time to another voluntary organisation, Support After Murder and Manslaughter, to assist the complementary work it carries out with the relatives and friends of homicide victims. In addition, the Home Office produces and distributes an information pack for the friends and relatives of homicide victims and a number of information leaflets for victims and witnesses.

The Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Bill, which was introduced on 3 December 1998, will provide greater protection for vulnerable or intimidated witnesses, including victims, and assist them to give their best evidence. The measures in the Bill are based on the recommendations in the "Speaking Up for Justice" report which was published last year. The Government have established an inter-departmental group to take forward the implementation of the recommendations in the report, including the measures in the Bill.

Deportation Orders

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deportation orders have been made in the last six months but have not yet been executed. [64353]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Between 1 June and 30 November 1998, 558 deportation orders were made, 431 have yet to be given effect. During the same period 330 people were deported, 203 of them on the strength of deportation orders made before 1 June.

The removal of Immigration Offenders and failed asylum seekers is at record levels, 9 per cent. above 1997, which itself was 22 per cent. higher than 1996.

Witnesses (Intimidation)

Dr. George Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he will introduce to protect witnesses and victims from being intimidated against giving evidence. [64367]

Mr. Boateng: The Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Bill, introduced on 3 December 1998, includes a range of practical measures to protect vulnerable or intimidated witnesses and assist them to give their best evidence. These were recommended in the report of the Working Group on Vulnerable or Intimidated Witnesses which we published for consultation last June. The implementation of these measures, together with those recommendations which do not require legislation will be taken forward by an Interdepartmental Steering Group which has already started work.

Probation Service (Cornwall and Devon)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the proposed merger of the probation services for Cornwall and Devon. [64379]

Mr. George Howarth: The consultation document "Joining Forces to Protect the Public", published on 6 August 1998, included proposals to align probation area boundaries with police force area boundaries, which would mean combining the Devon and Cornwall probation areas. We are now carefully considering the replies received, including that from the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell, and expect to announce decisions about the future organisation of these services soon.

Fire Services (Pensions)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to bring forward proposals concerning the underfunding of pensions in the (a) London and (b) other fire services. [65500]

Mr. George Howarth: We announced, as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review in July, that fire authorities in England would get an increase in the fire service element of total standard spending of £143.6 million—an average annual increase of 3.5 per cent.—over the next three years, including £47.1 million (3.6 per cent) for 1999–2000. The Review recognised future funding pressures, including pensions, but we have also deliberately set challenging efficiency targets for the fire service, as for other key public services.

As part of the provisional local government finance settlement for 1999–2000, we made changes to the fire standard spending assessment distribution formula, which will help those authorities which are facing the highest potential liabilities for pensions. Under the provisional settlement, London's fire standard spending assessment would be increased by 3.8 per cent. for 1999–2000.

We are considering the responses to the consultation document on the review of the firefighters' pension scheme and expect to come forward with proposals in the coming months.

Police Disability Entitlements

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to extend police disability entitlements to special constables injured while carrying out their duties; [65497]

(2) how many special constables in the Metropolitan Police area were forced to retire from police work due to disability resulting from injuries sustained in the line of duty in each of the last five years; [65496]

(3) what representations he has received regarding the provision of disability pensions and entitlements for former special constables forced to retire from police work due to injuries sustained in the line of duty. [65498]

Mr. Boateng: Arrangements to compensate special constables who are injured on duty are contained in the Special Constables Regulations. The 1995–96 Special Constabulary Working Group reviewed these arrangements and recommended a number of improvements. Proposals for new regulations were circulated to the police staff associations, the Association of Police Authorities and the special constabularies in December 1997. As a result, representations were received from:

Association of Chief Police Officers
Police Superintendents' Association
Police Federation
Association of Police Authorities
Bedfordshire Police
Cleveland Police
Derbyshire Constabulary
Special Constabulary Conferences of the North West, North East and Midlands Regions
Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy

New regulations are currently being drafted and will shortly be copied to the relevant bodies for any final comments. We expect the new regulations to come into force on 1 July 1999.

In the last five years, only two special constables retired from the Metropolitan Special Constabulary as a result of disabling injuries sustained on duty. One in 1993–94 and the other in 1994–95.

Copies of the Working Group's report and the consultation paper of December 1997 have been placed in the Library.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the timetable for dealing with the cases of (a) pre-13 July 1993 asylum applicants and (b) 1 July 1993 to 31 December 1995 asylum applicants. [65568]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Work is now starting on the applications lodged before July 1993 and we expect to have completed most of them by May 1999. Work is about to start on the outstanding applications lodged between July 1993 and December 1995 and it is our aim to have resolved these during the financial year 1999–2000.

Police Vehicles (Accidents)

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many accidents involving police vehicles in England and Wales have been referred to the Police Complaints Authority in each year since 1990. [65657]

Mr. Boateng: The information has been provided by the Police Complaints Authority (PCA).

The Police Complaints Authority has a statutory obligation to supervise the investigation of complaints involving death or serious injury. It also has discretion to supervise any other complaint investigation where, in its view, the public interest makes it appropriate. A police force may also voluntarily refer a matter. If no complaint is made by a member of the public, then the referral of the case remains a decision for the force concerned.

Prior to 1993, PCA statistics did not separately identify the supervision of investigations into deaths involving police vehicles. In the calendar year 1993, the Authority supervised investigations into eight cases involving seven deaths. From 1 January 1994 to 31 March 1995 (when statistical recording changed from calendar to financial year) 16 investigations into deaths associated with police vehicles were supervised by the Authority. 12 of those involved some form of pursuit. In 1995–96 it supervised 27 such investigations with 21 involving police pursuit. In 1997–98 29 investigations were supervised and 9 of those involved pursuit.

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in each police area in England and Wales how many road traffic accidents have occurred whilst police vehicles are in pursuit of another vehicle since 1990. [65656]

Mr. Boateng: Figures are not available centrally in exactly the categories requested, as statistics collate pursuit accidents with those arising from immediate responses to emergency call. Collection procedures changed in 1993 to include all police vehicle accidents on the roads. These range from minor-damage-only incidents to serious ones involving injury or death. The information set out in the table has been provided by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary, to which forces submit statistical returns.

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers in England and Wales have been involved in road traffic accidents whilst involved in car chases in each year since 1990; and how many such accidents have resulted in injury or fatality to (a) police officers, (b) those being pursued and (c) other members of the public. [65655]

Mr. Boateng: Figures are not available centrally in all the categories requested. The information has been provided by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary, to which forces submit statistical returns. It includes both police pursuits and immediate responses to emergency calls.

Crowd Policing (Charges)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances police authorities are permitted to charge promoters for the costs of crowd policing outside (a) sporting events and (b) entertainment events. [65489]

Mr. Boateng: It is for chief officers of police to decide when to charge for providing a police service. However, under Home Office guidelines, no charge should normally be made for officers deployed on the public highway outside sporting or entertainment venues.

Sexual and Violent Offenders

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases periods of extended supervision for sexual and violent offenders were imposed under the provisions of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 between 30 September and 31 December 1998. [65567]

Mr. Boateng: These provisions were commenced on 30 September 1998. Information about extended sentences is being collected on the Home Office court proceedings database but will not be available until the autumn of this year.

Child Curfews

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many local child curfew schemes were made by local authorities under the provisions of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 between 30 September and 31 December 1998. [65566]

Mr. Boateng: The relevant provisions of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998, which enable local authorities to establish a local child curfew scheme, were brought into force on 30 September 1998. Home Office guidance on the operation of these new powers was issued on 29 September 1998. Before imposing a local child curfew, local authorities, in consultation with the chief officer of police and such other persons or bodies that it considers appropriate, must first draw up proposals for a local child curfew scheme, including arrangements for consultation with the residents in the area in which the curfew is to apply, and submit these to the Secretary of State for approval.

No applications for local child curfew schemes have been received at this early stage. Local child curfew schemes are designed to be part of an integrated response to reducing crime and disorder in local areas. In considering their potential use, local authorities will wish to take into account the wider crime and disorder reduction strategies, also required under the Crime and Disorder Act, which are currently being developed.

Euthanasia

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many hospitals are currently the subject of police investigations into cases of alleged euthanasia; and if he will list them. [65570]

Mr. Boateng: The investigation of alleged offences is an operational matter for chief officers of police and information is not collected centrally on the number or type of investigations being conducted by the police.

Horses (Mineworking)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning horses working underground in coal and mineral mining; and if he will make a statement. [65490]

Mr. George Howarth: This Department has received 10 letters and a petition.

The Coal and Other Mines (Horses) Regulations 1956 set out the requirements about the use of horses and ponies in mines. The Mines Inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive, which is responsbile for enforcing the legislation, have found no evidence of the maltreatment of any horses and ponies used in mines.

Criminal Conviction Certificates

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of criminal conviction certificates which will be issued per year; and what plans he has to introduce a code of practice governing the use of such certificates. [65965]

Mr. Boateng: We estimate that there will be between 5 million and 6 million conviction certificates issued each year. Under section 122 of the Police Act 1997, a code of practice for registered bodies (which will be entitled to receive copies of enhanced criminal record certificates and criminal record certificates) will be developed in consultation with interested parties. In the case of criminal conviction certificates, it will be for the individual concerned to decide to whom to provide the information contained in them. We shall, however, consult about guidance to employers.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether it is Government policy to encourage the use of the criminal conviction certificate in the assessment of candidates for employment. [65966]

Mr. Boateng: No. It will be up to individual employers to decide whether to ask to see a criminal convictions certificate. Criminal conviction certificates will only give details of unspent convictions. This is information which applicants can be asked to disclose at the moment. The criminal conviction certificate will allow employers to be sure that the information they have been given is full and accurate.

Chevening House

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of providing police protection at Chevening House, Kent in the last year for which figures are available; and what is the additional daily cost when the Foreign Secretary is in residence. [66007]

Mr. Straw: It is established Government practice not to disclose the actual cost of protecting an individual. If the costs of protection were revealed, it would be possible to estimate the scale of protection and that would prejudice the security of the individual. For the same reason, we are unable to disclose details of protection provided.

Visa Renewal

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the time taken to process applications for the renewal of visas for foreign nationals currently living in the United Kingdom; and what steps he has taken to reduce the time. [65728]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regularly receive representations concerning the time taken to process such applications. The introduction of compulsory application forms for most immigration applications has enabled a large number of straightforward applications to be decided quickly. The current computerisation and restructuring of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate's caseworking functions is intended to speed up caseworking times. This restructuring is now underway and, until it is completed and the new structures have settled down, the major upheaval involved will inevitably affect processing times.

Criminal Records Bureau

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will exempt adult volunteers working in youth organisations from paying the fee required by the Criminal Records Bureau for checks on full-time employees working with young people. [65871]

Mr. Boateng: We considered very carefully whether there was any way in which free checks could be provided for volunteers. Whilst we acknowledge the valuable contribution volunteers make, we have concluded that it will not be practicable to provide any free checks from the Criminal Records Bureau for volunteers or for any other groups. We realise that this is unwelcome news, but providing free checks would prove an unsustainable burden on the public purse, and may increase demand for certificates from the Bureau to an uncontrollable extent. In addition, we do not consider it would be fair to allow volunteers to have free certificates when there are other equally deserving groups such as the unemployed or the disabled. The cost of the fees for certificates from the Bureau will be kept to the minimum necessary to recoup costs.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made in reducing the replication of animal experiments already undertaken. [64364]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 19 January 1998, Official Report, column 387. Whilst some replication of experiments is needed to ensure the reliability of previous research, the Inspectorate will not recommend that a licence be granted unless there are good reasons for replicating work already undertaken.

In regulatory toxicology, we are currently encouraging regulatory authorities and testers to make full use of reduction, refinement and replacement alternatives, including the possibility of data sharing, in order to reduce the need for animal tests.

In the wider context, all establishments will be required to maintain ethical review processes from 1 April. One of the roles of these processes will be to review proposed and ongoing work to ensure it is fully justified.

Special Constables (Injuries Compensation)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements are made for compensation by single payment or pension for special constables injured in the course of their duties. [65751]

Mr. Boateng: Arrangements to compensate special constables who are injured on duty are contained in the Special Constables Regulations. In brief, a gratuity and a pension is payable in the event of:

death;

permanent disability leading to complete inability to work;

and

permanent disability leading to inability to continue ordinary employment

In addition, a special constable who loses remuneration from private employment in consequence of an injury is entitled to actual loss of pay for a maximum of 28 weeks.

Following recommendations made by the 1995–96 Special Constabulary Working Group, new regulations are currently being drafted which will extend the circumstances in which injured specials will qualify for compensation. These will be laid before Parliament later this year and we expect them to come into force on 1 July 1999.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the current system of criminal injuries compensation in so far as it relates to sexual offences; and if he will make a statement. [65923]

Mr. Boateng: We have been reviewing the criminal injuries compensation scheme in the light of the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review, and are considering whether any changes to the scheme might be necessary or desirable. That consideration includes the awards for injuries resulting from sexual offences. We hope to be able to announce shortly how we intend to carry this forward.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total amount paid in compensation for loss of earnings by the CICA and the CICB for each year from 1990 to the present. [65924]

Mr. Boateng: The Criminal Injuries Compensation Board advise that there is no data to distinguish loss of earnings from other elements of compensation paid in respect of claims settled by them under the scheme based on common law damages. The approach was often to make an inclusive award which encompassed a loss of earnings element, but which did not quantify it precisely.

The Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority advise that under the tariff-based scheme, introduced with effect from 1 April 1996, the amount of compensation paid for loss of earnings is as follows:

Year	£
1996–97	22,470
1997–98	351,013
April to December 1998	1,735,886

These figures reflect the increase in claims ready for settlement from the scheme's introduction.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of successful applicants for criminal injuries compensation received compensation for loss of earnings from the CICA, having been absent from work for at least 28 weeks, in each year from 1996 to 1998. [65926]

Mr. Boateng: The percentage of all successful claims settled by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority which have included a loss of earnings element is as follows:

Year	Percentage
1996–97	0.08
1997–98	0.29
April to December 1998	0.69

These figures substantially under-represent the percentage likely to result from a more representative cohort of settled claims once the new scheme has fully bedded in.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average time taken to settle claims for criminal injuries compensation by the CICA and its predecessor the CICB in each year from 1990 to the present. [65925]

Mr. Boateng: There are no meaningful average waiting times for settling claims for criminal injuries compensation. Claims under the scheme vary greatly in their complexity. They range from straightforward ones, in which a decision may be issued within a matter of weeks, to exceptionally complex cases where, for example, the medical diagnosis or prognosis is uncertain, and where therefore, it may take a number of years for the injury to be fully and fairly assessed. Interim payments are usually made in such cases to assist the victim in the shorter term.

The Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority (CICA) and the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board (CICB) advise that—if cases at the extremes are discounted—the average time to issue a first decision under the 1990 scheme (administered by the CICB) was about nine months. Under the tariff scheme (administered by the CICA), the average time is about seven months.

Burglars (Sentencing)

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what resources he plans to make available to prisons to deal with the implications of his proposals for tougher sentences for burglars. [65802]

Mr. Boateng: The latest long-term projections for the Prison Service are lower than had previously been the case. I therefore, expect the Prison Service to be able to accommodate the extra places within existing provision at least for the next three years.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates his Department has made of the impact on prison numbers of his proposed tougher sentences for burglars. [65803]

Mr. Boateng: The Home Office estimates that minimum sentences of three years for those convicted for a third time of domestic burglar will add between 4,000 and 4,400 to the prison population over 10 years. The build up will be gradual because the new provision applies only when all the offences are committed after implementation (in December 1999) and one of the two previous offences was committed after the offender had been convicted of the other.

Prisoners (Medical Examinations and Assessments)

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the cost has been of transporting and securing prisoners from HM prisons to NHS hospitals for medical examinations since 1 May 1997. [65748]

Mr. George Howarth: Any such arrangements would be made locally by the prison concerned. Financial information in this form is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Police Manpower (Wales)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many whole-time equivalent police officers were stationed in each constabulary in Wales on (a) 30 April 1997, (b) 30 April 1998 and (c) 31 October 1998. [66372]

Mr. Boateng: Information on police numbers is collected at the end of March and September. The statistics for the period requested are set out in the table:

Force	31 March 1997	31 March 1998	30 September 1998[1]
Dyfed-Powys	1,005	1,002	1,013
Gwent	1,243	1,233	1,254
North Wales	1,369	1,396	1,395
South Wales	2,976	2,986	2,946
Wales total	6,593	6,617	6,608

[1] Police numbers are provisional

Involuntary Manslaughter

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to legislate on the recommendations of the Law Commission, Legislating the Criminal Code: Involuntary Manslaughter. [65187]

Mr. Boateng: The Government value greatly the work of the Law Commission. The recommendations on involuntary manslaughter and corporate killing contained in their report no. 237 "Legislating the Criminal Code: Involuntary Manslaughter" raise some difficult and complex issues.

An inter-departmental working group, which includes a member of the Law Commission, is actively considering these issues. Once we have their conclusions we will consider how to take the Law Commission's proposals forward.

Lord and Lady Hoffman

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he knew of Lord Hoffman's and Lady Hoffman's involvement with Amnesty International when he announced his decision regarding the extradition of General Pinochet. [65089]

Mr. Straw: I explained in the reasons for my decision to issue an authority to proceed on 9 December 1998, Official Report, columns 213–17, that I had not accepted a representation made on behalf of Senator Pinochet that I should disregard the House of Lords' judgment on the grounds of alleged bias on the part of one of the Law Lords.

It was not for me, as Home Secretary, to question the basis on which the House of Lords has come to a particular decision.

PRIME MINISTER

BBC (Iraq Coverage)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if it was with his authority that his spokesman contacted the BBC to express disquiet about the BBC's handling of the Iraq conflict; and if he will make a statement. [65381]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 13 January 1999]: Yes. The Government were concerned to ensure that the British public were provided with factual and balanced reporting of Operation Desert Fox. Journalists reporting from Baghdad were, and are, subject to considerable restrictions on access and information. It was particularly important, therefore, that live coverage of and commentary on Operation Desert Fox from Iraq should explain, and take account of, such restrictions. This was made clear to media representatives, including in the BBC, on a number of occasions.

Bahrain

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he had with the Bahraini Head of State about (a) democracy and (b) human and civil rights in that country during his recent meeting; and if he will make a statement. [65914]

The Prime Minister: I met the Prime Minister of Bahrain on 5 January 1999.

Our conversation focused on recent events in the region, particularly Iraq. I took the opportunity to thank the Prime Minister for Bahrain's continued practical and political support. Human rights were not raised on this occasion.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has had with the Russian Prime Minister about his statement concerning the bombardment of Iraq. [65387]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 14 January 1999]: I sent a message to Prime Minister Primakov explaining our policy on Iraq. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary was in close touch with his Russian counterpart during and after operation Desert Fox. We are now working with the Russians and other Security Council members to find a way forward.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will seek to hold discussions with the Government of Iran about the consequences of military action against Iraq for the strength of the position of Saddam Hussein. [66465]

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary was in contact with his Iranian counterpart during Operation Desert Fox. Bilateral discussions continue at official level.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister when he will reply to the letter from the Religious Society of Friends in Britain of 17 December concerning military action against Iraq. [65473]

The Prime Minister: My Office has no record of having received this letter.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister for what reasons he agreed to the decision to act quickly against Iraq before the period of Ramadan. [65389]

The Prime Minister: I told the House on 16 November 1998, Official Report, columns 607–23, that I would have no hesitation in ordering the use of force once again if Iraq failed to live up to its undertaking to afford UN weapons inspectors full co-operation in every respect. The Executive Chairman of UNSCOM was asked to report on Iraq's co-operation over the month that followed. He delivered his report on 15 December 1998 and its conclusions were unequivocal. Iraq had failed to co-operate fully with UNSCOM and had even introduced new restrictions. My decision to authorise military action was taken on that basis.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister when he was consulted by the United States about its decision to bomb Iraq. [65390]

The Prime Minister: We were in close contact with the Americans on all aspects of policy towards Iraq, before, during and after military action. The decision to launch Operation Desert Fox was a joint one.

Honours Lists

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Prime Minister how many United Kingdom nominations his office received for New Year and Birthday Honours in 1998; and how many United Kingdom honours were awarded in (a) the 1998 Birthday List and (b) the 1999 New Year List. [65905]

The Prime Minister: In 1998 the Nominations Unit received 3,500 new honours nominations from members of the public and my office received some 4,000 nominations from Departments (most proposed by national bodies, associations and voluntary organisations) for consideration in the 1998 Honours Lists. The number of awards in my Honours List covering the whole range of activities in the United Kingdom made at (a) Birthday 1998 and at (b) New Year 1999 was 983. In both Lists, over 40 per cent. of the awards resulted from nominations made by members of the public. However, as it takes up to a year, and in some cases longer, for nominations to be fully validated and assessed, it is not possible to relate the number of nominations received in any one year to the number of candidates considered for particular Honours Lists.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those occasions since 1 May 1997 when he has visited New York, listing his mode of transport to and from the United Kingdom. [66363]

The Prime Minister: I have visited New York on two occasions since 1 May 1997. I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan) on 25 February 1998, Official Report, columns 250–51, and to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) on 19 October 1998, Official Report, column 914. On both occasions I travelled by commercial aircraft.

Eurocorps

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister if the Government endorsed at the Heads of Government meeting at Portschach the principle of the United Kingdom joining Eurocorps. [66427]

The Prime Minister: No. We have no plans for the United Kingdom to join Eurocorps.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

BBC (Iraq Coverage)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had with the BBC concerning the BBC's handling of the Iraq conflict; and if he will make a statement. [65646]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 14 January 1999]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence today, Official Report, column 310.

Yemen

Mr. Godsiff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the British Consul in Yemen has been allowed to see the fifth British national detained; and if he will make a statement on the role of the Foreign Office regarding the detention of the five British nationals. [66089]

Mr. Robin Cook: Our Consul-General had access on 14 January to the fifth British detainee, Malek Nasser Harhara (to whom access has been denied on the grounds that he is a Yemen/British dual national). Mr. Harhara said that he was in satisfactory health and had not been physically abused.

The Consul-General had called on three of the detainees on 8 January. All three looked in reasonable condition. Of these, one detainee, Sarnad Ahmed, said that he had been tortured in the week after his arrest on 24 December 1998, but that his treatment had improved since then. The Consul-General reported that he appeared now to be in good health.

I made clear to the Yemeni Prime Minister on 11 January my concern about the allegation of torture. Dr. Iryani said that only one of the detainees had complained. He had investigated the issue personally. If the claim were found to be true, whoever was responsible would be prosecuted. Dr. Iryani assured me that the detainees would be properly treated.

A second detainee, Shahid Butt, told our Consul-General that, in the week since his arrest of 24 December 1998, he had been hit once or twice and slapped, and made to sign a paper. The Consul-General reported that he looked fit and well. He complained that there was no light in his cell at night and that he could not go to the toilet when he asked, and about the number of mosquitoes.

The third detainee, Gulam Hussain, looked in good condition. The Consul-General checked carefully that he had no problems with his back or with his asthma, two pre-existing medical conditions.

On 9 January 1999, the Consul-General saw Mohssin Ghailan, another of the detainees. He said that his treatment was now normal. He added that he had been slapped in the week after his arrest, but not since then. Mohssin also said that he was concerned about a possible liver problem, and was in some pain. The Consul-General noticed that his skin was yellowish, but could not judge the significance, not knowing his normal complexion.

Our Consul-General made representations, on behalf of the detainees whom he saw, which resulted in the provision of reading material, washing material, extra food, greater freedom within prison and greater access to the toilet. He also received an assurance of medical treatment for Mohssin Ghailan.

I spoke again to the Prime Minister of Yemen on 14 January 1999. I welcomed the fact that we had had access to Mr. Harhara. I repeated my concern that all the detainees should be charged or released. I also pressed for access to the detainees for their defence lawyer, and for an independent doctor. Dr. Iryani took note, and undertook to work for a positive response to these requests.

Since then, the lawyer representing the detainees, Mr. Basunaid, has informed us that charges have been laid. The detainees have been charged with association with armed groups planning to commit murder, explosions and destruction and with the possession of weapons, under Article 133 of the Yemeni Penal Code. The case is, therefore, sub judice.

Our Ambassador and Consul-General continue to press for access to the detainees for Mr. Basunaid and for an independent doctor. They are also pressing for further consular visits, including to Mr. Harhara, and for transfer to the central prison in Aden where conditions are better. Mr. Basunaid has, however, been told by the Yemeni authorities that he must await the end of the Eid holiday before seeing his clients.

The Embassy and Mr. Basunaid are in close touch about all issues relating to the case, including about the allegations that the detainees may have been forced to confess. In the light of our contacts with Mr. Basunaid, we will consider whether to make representations to the Yemeni authorities about the conduct of the investigation.

Mr. Gerald Bull

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what bilateral discussions there have been between the Belgian and UK Governments concerning evidence being given by Mr. Stephen Kock, Colonel Hardy, Colonel Jack and Mr. Blane to the Belgian inquiry into the death of Mr. Gerald Bull. [65147]

Ms Quin: None. I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my predecessor, the then Minister with responsibility for Europe, my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson), to my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton and Wanstead (Mr. Cohen) on 21 May 1998, Official Report, column 528.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice Her Majesty's Government have given since 1989 to former directors of ASTRA about giving evidence to the Belgian police on the death of Mr. Gerald Bull. [65148]

Ms Quin: No such advice has been given.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place between his Department and the Belgian Government on arrangements for cooperation over the Belgian Government's inquiry into the murder of Mr. Gerald Bull. [65146]

Ms Quin: There have been no such discussions.

UK Democratic and Governmental Structures (Council of Europe Study)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the results of the examination of the United Kingdom's democratic and Governmental structures which was carried out by the Council of Europe from June 1996 onwards. [65326]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Secretary General's overview of the functioning and protection of democratic institutions in all Council of Europe member states remains before the Committee of Ministers which will resume its discussions at its next monitoring meeting in March 1999.

The conclusions of the Committee of Ministers will be made public when available.

Defence Contracts (Malaysia)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the officials in his Department who met Mr. Stephen Kock to discuss matters relating to defence contracts with Malaysia in the period from January 1985 to the end of December 1988. [65145]

Mr. Fatchett: We have not been able to find any reference in our files to meetings between Mr. Kock and members of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office during this period.

Butler Report

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the French Foreign Minister about the latter's statement concerning the Butler report. [65391]

Mr. Fatchett: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary met the French Foreign Minister in Paris on 8 January 1999 and had a full discussion on all aspects of Iraq policy.

Saudi Arabia and Kuwait (Democracy)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to promote democracy in (a) Saudi Arabia and (b) Kuwait. [65474]

Mr. Fatchett: We seek to encourage constitutional development and greater participatory government in both Saudi Arabia and Kuwait through a variety of means, including official and parliamentary contacts, ministerial visits and informal dialogue on democratic issues.

Chechnya

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was discussed at the meeting which took place between Foreign Office officials and Granger Telecom personnel in August 1998. [66111]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Foreign Office officials dealing with the kidnap of Jon James and Camilla Carr in the Russian Republic of Chechnya met two Weybridge-based Granger Telecom managers at FCO request on 21 August 1998. The Carr/James kidnap was then into its 13th month.

Officials explained that their lengthy capacity illustrated the dangers of operating in Chechnya and asked if Granger had any information which might help to secure the release of Carr and James, given that the UK has no diplomatic representations in Chechnya. The answer was no. Granger described the terms and funding of their contract with a Chechen private company, ChechenTelecom, to establish a telecommunications infrastructure in Chechnya, and said that ChechenTelecom assumed full responsibility for the security of Granger expatriate staff in Grozny. FCO officials said that HM Government could not encourage UK humanitarian assistance or investment in Chechnya.

At the meeting FCO officials showed to Granger the FCO travel advice of 18 August 1998, which states:

"We strongly advise against travel to the Chechen Republic, Ingushetia, Dagestan, North Ossetia and the Stravropol/Chechnya border, because of the unstable security situation. Visitors have been kidnapped in these areas recently".

Sierra Leone

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance was given to the United Kingdom High Commissioner to Sierra Leone resident in Conakry between May 1997 and April 1998 by (a) EU embassies and (b) non-EU embassies; what messages were sent by the United Kingdom High Commissioner to Sierra Leone resident in Conakry between May 1997 and April 1998 to London via the German embassy in Conakry; and for what reason no confidential bag service was available to the UK High Commissioner to Sierra Leone resident in Conakry between May 1997 and April 1998. [66384]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The German Embassy in Conakry provided limited communication and logistical support to Mr. Penfold whilst he was in Conakry. Other EU embassies and non EU embassies did not provide special assistance. Mr. Penfold received a number of classified telegrams via the German Embassy but used commercial fax facilities for sending messages to London. Mr. Penfold was operating on a temporary basis and in hotel accommodation and arrangements were made for a commercial courier service limited to non-classified material.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give permission to Horst Timmreck to visit St. Helena to reclaim his property. [65791]

Mr. Fatchett: Mr. Horst Timmreck is subject to a St. Helenian exclusion order, the revocation or variation of which is the responsibility of the Governor of St. Helena. Any application by Mr. Timmreck for a visit to St. Helena under a variation of the exclusion order should be made to the Governor.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for the introduction of access to the Internet at reasonable cost by citizens of St. Helena. [65789]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: St. Helena's telecommunications are provided by Cable and Wireless plc. Internet access is currently available, on a temporary basis, through Ascension Island. Cable and Wireless has recently removed its standing charge for such access. It plans to install an Internet server on St. Helena in 1999 and will review its charges when this becomes operational.

Vanuatu (Diplomatic Representation)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for diplomatic representation by Her Majesty's Government in Vanuatu. [65792]

Mr. Fatchett: Her Majesty's Government will continue to be represented. We are at present looking at the form this representation will take in the future.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Millennium Volunteer Scheme

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what the budget is for the Millennium Volunteer Scheme; how much has been spent to date, broken down into (a) volunteer schemes and (b) administration; [65238]

(2) how many volunteers have taken part in the Millennium Volunteer Scheme to date; if he will publish a breakdown of volunteers by (a) gender and (b) ethnic group; and if he will make a statement on the number of people helped by the scheme. [65239]

Ms Hodge: Millennium Volunteers will have a total of £15 million allocated to it from the windfall levy as start up funding in Great Britain, of which £12.75 million is available in England. £303,935 has been spent on the Programme to date in England, of which £109,870 relates to projects and related expenditure and £194,065 relates to administration. I hope to be making a further announcement about Millennium Volunteers and the longer term funding of the programme in England shortly.

A total of 269 volunteers have taken part in the nine Millennium Volunteers demonstration projects we established last summer. Of these, 168 were female and 101 male; 226 were white and 43 were from black or Asian ethnic groups. We will be evaluating the benefits to the community and to the individual volunteers of Millennium Volunteers but it is too early to provide such an assessment at present.

Engineering Students

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the Government's plans to monitor the impact of the new student funding system on recruitment to higher education institutions of students studying engineering. [65294]

Mr. Mudie: Initial evidence shows that there is a small decrease of 1.7 per cent. in the total number of people accepted to higher education. This is made up of an increase in school and college leavers and a decrease in mature students.

Although the Department has no mechanisms in place to monitor specific subject areas, it has in place a programme of evaluation work to assess the impact of the new funding arrangements on participation in higher education by different types of student, examining for instance the social background, ethnic group, disability, age and gender of students and subject of study, which will include engineering. This work will draw on data produced by the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS) and the Higher Education Statistics Agency (HESA). In addition, we are commissioning an update of the Student Income and Expenditure Survey which will provide information about the impact of the new arrangements on student finances.

The key results of our monitoring and research will be published and available to Parliament.

Rainham Marsh, Havering

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the basis for the statement in the application and associated papers that the Employment Service supports the amended planning application made by Havering Borough Council for development on a site of special scientific interest at Rainham Marsh in Havering. [65906]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Tom Brake, dated 14 January 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question in which you asked for information on what is the basis for the statement in the application and associated papers that the Employment Service supports the amended planning application made by Havering Borough Council for development on a site of special scientific interest at Rainham Marsh in Havering. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The Employment Service has made no formal response to the planning application. However, I understand that Havering Borough Council asked the manager of our Dagenham Jobcentre in November for information on numbers of Jobseekers and skill levels/shortages within the Rainham area and for an assurance that, in the event of a Business Park being built on Rainham Marsh, the Employment Service would support the Council in recruiting construction and other workers for this project. Such an assurance of help was given on the understanding that it would apply only if the planning application was approved.

I hope this is helpful.

Nurses

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many non-EEA nurses have been given work permits for UK hospitals in each of the last five years; and how many of these are (a) for one year only and (b) for longer than one year. [66053]

Ms Hodge: The specific information requested is not available as work permit records do not identify the type of employer. The numbers of non-EEA nurses for whom work permits were issued in the last five years were as follows:

Year	12 months or less	More than 12 months
1995	74	573
1996	148	759
1997	363	475
1998	583	636

Special Needs

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance his Department gives on the maximum time which local education authorities should take to produce a statement of special educational needs; and what procedures are in place to measure compliance with this guidance. [65785]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Local education authorities are required by law to serve a draft statement on the parents of a child with special educational needs within eighteen weeks of first proposing to carry out an assessment of the child's needs. The Audit Commission monitors LEAs' compliance with this requirement, and publishes annual statistics for England and Wales showing the proportion of draft statements produced by each LEA within eighteen weeks. These statistics show that in 1996–97 only 48 per cent. of all draft statements were prepared within the statutory deadline. The Programme of Action on special educational needs published by the Department last November made it clear that the Government regard this figure as unacceptably low, and that they are committed to achieving a significant improvement. The Department has recently provided LEAs with advice on good practice in this area, and has challenged the worst-performing LEAs to improve.

Arts and Humanities Research Board

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to extend grants given by the Arts and Humanities Research Board to institutions other than those receiving grants from the Higher Education Funding Council for England and Department of Education (Northern Ireland). [66234]

Mr. Mudie: The Arts and Humanities Research Board currently receives grants for its research activities, other than postgraduate awards, only from the HEFCE and DENI; and it therefore makes research grants to institutions within their areas of funding responsibility. The provision of additional funding for the AHRB to extend its research grants to institutions in Scotland and Wales is a matter primarily for the Scottish and Welsh Higher Education Funding Councils, taking into account guidance from my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales.

Teaching Union Officers

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance he has issued to local education authorities on good practice in providing time off for officers of teaching unions. [65752]

Mr. Charles Clarke: No such guidance has been issued to local education authorities. The statutory entitlement to reasonable time off for employee representatives to perform their functions as such representatives is a general entitlement and it is for individual employers to decide their practice in meeting their legal obligations.

Teachers (Bureaucracy)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the members of his Department's working Group on Reducing the Bureaucratic Burden on Teachers, the date on which it was set up and the number of meetings it has held. [65946]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The membership of the Working Group on Reducing the Bureaucratic Burden on Teachers and the date on which it was set up are detailed in my reply to the hon. Member for Havant (Mr. Willetts) on 16 December 1998, Official Report, columns 556–57.

The Group met six times in preparing its report to Ministers, which was published on 16 January 1998. A copy of the report is in the Library.

School Consultation Exercises

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what criteria are used to determine how many and which schools will be involved in those consultation exercises which are conducted with a random selection of schools. [65944]

Mr. Charles Clarke: For most purposes, a sample of 500 schools is sufficient. A sample will be larger only if it is important to analyse responses from different types of school. Schools are selected using systematic sampling from a list in area and phase of school order. The system ensures that any one school will be selected infrequently, thereby minimising the burden of consultation.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on how many occasions over the past year his Department has given recipients 10 weeks, excluding school holidays, to respond to consultation documents. [65940]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Between January and December of 1998 this Department gave a response time of 10 weeks or more for 27 consultation documents.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what criteria are used to determine which consultation documents should be sent to a limited number of schools rather than all schools. [65943]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Only consultations on major changes affecting schools are sent to all schools. Normally, consultation papers are sent only to a small sample of about 500 schools.

Education Action Zones

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the sums of money that have been paid, to date, into each Education Action Zone by the businesses involved in those zones. [65945]

Ms Estelle Morris: The 25 Education Action Zones have so far raised some £5 million towards the £6 million target for business contribution in the first year.

Disability Rights Commission

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 11 January 1999, Official Report, column 97, if he will list the estimated costs for each of the proposed functions of the Commission which formed the basis of the estimated annual running cost of the Commission. [66029]

Ms Hodge: It will be for the Disability Rights Commission (DRC), when it is established, to decide how to allocate its resources.

CABINET OFFICE

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will up-date last October's List of Ministerial Responsibilities. [65773]

Mr. Kilfoyle: A revised edition of the "List of Ministerial Responsibilities including Agencies" is currently being prepared and I shall publish it shortly. Copies of the new edition will be made available to Members free of charge from the Vote Office.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Abortion

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the medical grounds for abortion in Northern Ireland extend to (a) foetal abnormality and (b) rape, incest or sexual assault. [64776]

Mr. Ingram: While the law on abortion in Northern Ireland does not extend specifically to cover (a) foetal abnormality or (b) rape, incest or sexual assault, therapeutic terminations can be carried out in both these categories where in the doctors' judgment, there is serious risk to the physical or mental health of the mother.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of conceptions in the latest year for which figures are available ended in recorded spontaneous abortion. [64777]

Mr. McFall: Information on the total number of conceptions is not collected centrally. There are currently no plans to do so in the future.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of the abortions recorded in Northern Ireland in 1997–98 were classified as (a) spontaneous abortions and (b) induced or medical abortions. [64778]

Mr. McFall: Of the abortions which took place in Northern Ireland hospitals in 1997–98, 1,594 were recorded as spontaneous and 77 as medical or induced abortions.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will issue guidelines to general practitioners, obstetricians and gynaecologists (a) on the grounds under which termination of pregnancy may be carried out and (b) on referring women who qualify for a legal abortion under the terms of the Abortion Act 1967 to hospitals or clinics in those parts of the UK where the Act applies. [64779]

Mr. McFall: There are no plans to issue such guidelines in Northern Ireland.

SCOTLAND

Heroin

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the powers provided by the misuse of drugs legislation to law enforcement agencies in respect of heroin abuse. [64314]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 17 December 1998]: The Government fully recognise the dangers posed by the misuse of heroin and the need for effective measures to tackle the problem. The Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 provides law enforcement agencies with a range of powers enabling them to take action against those suspected of producing, supplying, or being in possession of controlled drugs. The adequacy of these powers is kept continuously under review and the Government will not hesitate to act if they consider that the powers require to be strengthened.

Royal Burgh Improvements

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent in Scotland on Royal Burgh environment improvement by the Government since May 1997. [64427]

Mr. McLeish: This information is not held centrally.

Ministerial Flights

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total cumulative cost to his Department of ministerial use of RAF flights in the year to 1 May 1997. [64738]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 11 January 1999]: As the answer enclosed with my letter of 2 December made clear, Ministers are required under the terms of the Ministerial Code always to make efficient and cost effective travel arrangements. The rules on travel for Ministers are the same as those which applied to the previous Administration. A comparison of travel by Ministers on RAF flights between the 16 month period between 2 May 1997 and 30 September 1998 is not directly comparable with the 12 months of the previous Administration. The cost of air travel by RAF flights in the year to May 1997 is £8,972.50.

Mr. Stephen Kock

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date in 1990 Mr. Stephen Kock was interviewed for a firearms offence in Scotland; and in what circumstances. [65123]

Mr. McLeish: On 15 January 1990, a complaint was received by Strathclyde Police regarding the reckless discharge of a firearm by Mr. Kock who was formally cautioned. On Friday, 9 February 1990, Mr. Kock was charged with the culpable and reckless discharge of a firearm; contravention of the Firearms Act 1968; assault; and breach of the peace. Mr. Kock subsequently pled guilty at Oban Sheriff Court to the firearms charges and was fined a total of £650. Not guilty pleas to the remaining charges were accepted by the Procurator Fiscal.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what police protection has been provided for the home of Mr. Stephen Kock at public expense; and when such protection was provided. [65122]

Mr. McLeish: No police protection has ever been provided at the home of Mr. Stephen Kock.

Central Scotland Healthcare NHS Trust

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the report of the inquiry into alleged misappropriation of public funds by senior management of Central Scotland Healthcare NHS Trust. [65983]

Mr. Galbraith: The decision to publish the Report of the Independent Inquiry team into remuneration matters at Central Scotland Healthcare NHS Trust is the responsibility of the Trust itself, together with action arising from the Report's recommendations.

The former Chairman of the Trust has given a commitment that the findings of the Report will be made public and I expect this commitment to be honoured by the Trust board when it considers the final Report later this month.

Public Defence Solicitors' Office

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions the Director of the Public Defence Solicitors' Office has met the Chief Executive of the Scottish Legal Aid Board since his appointment; if those meetings were minuted; and if he will place a copy of any minutes or notes from the meetings in the Library. [65794]

Mr. McLeish: Mr. Alistair Watson of the Public Defence Solicitors' Office took up post on 1 April 1998. He reports to the Scottish Legal Aid Board through the Chief Executive only on administrative matters. On all other matters, including casework, the PDSO operates independently of the Board.

Since 1 April 1998, the Director and the Chief Executive have had a number of meetings on administrative matters. The exact number has not been recorded. Notes of these meetings are internal documents of the Board and are confidential.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many clients have been referred to the Public Defence Solicitor's Office since its establishment, broken down by month; and how many (i) interviews with clients have been conducted, (ii) intermediate diets have been carried out on behalf of clients and (iii) trials have been conducted on behalf of clients. [65955]

Mr. McLeish: The number of clients/new cases referred to the Public Defence Solicitors' Office (PDSO) since its establishment on 1 October 1998 until 31 December 1998 (the latest date for which information is available) is shown in the following table.

Month/Year	New cases
October 1998	42
November 1998	55
December 1998	65

Information on the total number of interviews with clients is not available as many of these interviews may have taken place at court.

Intermediate diets were scheduled to take place by 31 December 1998 on 19 occasions. No information is presently available on how many of these diets proceeded. Twelve trial diets were scheduled to take place by 31 December 1998. Of those, 3 proceeded to trial.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of (a) the salary of the Public Defence Solicitor, (b) the salaries of each of his deputies, (c) the administrative staff costs of the Public Defence Solicitors' Office, (d) the rental costs of the office and (e) the other outgoings of the office. [65793]

Mr. McLeish: The salary of the Director of the Public Defence Solicitors' Office (PDSO) is £50,000 per annum; and the salaries of the 5 public defence solicitors range from £21,000 to £30,000 per annum. The total support staff salary bill is £74,555 per annum (inclusive of National Insurance). The annual rental costs of the office are £52,875 and the other outgoings are estimated to be £117,150 per annum.

Beavers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the letter of 6 October from the Minister with responsibility for agriculture, the environment and fisheries to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, what expert advice and recommendations he has received from Scottish Natural Heritage concerning the re-introduction of beavers into Scotland; and what action he proposes to take. [65392]

Mr. Macdonald: No formal advice or recommendations has yet been submitted by Scottish Natural Heritage to my hon. Friend. I understand that SNH's view is that a limited pilot reintroduction project may be the best way forward. SNH is developing proposals prior to putting advice and recommendations to Ministers.

Nurses

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the NHS salary bill for nurses in Scotland in each of the last 10 years, (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the total NHS salary bill. [65521]

Mr. Galbraith: The information requested is set out in the table.

Year	Total nurses salary £000	Total NHS salary £000	Nurse salary as a percentage of total NHS salary

The decrease in the salary bill for nurses in 1994–95 onwards is due to the introduction of Project 2000. The figures for 1997–98 are provisional.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many whole-time equivalent (a) bank, (b) agency and (c) contract nurses were employed, and at what cost, in each of the NHS health trust areas in Scotland for each of the last 10 years. [65520]

Mr. Galbraith: The information for agency nursing staff, which is available only from 1994 onwards, is shown in the table. No cost data to match the staff numbers are available. Information for bank and contract nursing staff is not available centrally.

Royal Commission on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Scotland

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the forthcoming policy and financial management review of the Royal Commission on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Scotland. [66484]

Mr. Dewar: As part of the Government's programme of periodic reviews of non-Departmental Public Bodies, I announced to the House on 19 May 1998, Official Report, column 336, our proposal to move forward with a review of the Royal Commission on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Scotland.

The first stage of the review has been completed. This addressed major issues of principle. The report has established that (a) there is an overwhelming need and demand for continuation of the Royal Commission's core functions, principally surveying and recording the man-made environment of Scotland and maintaining and curating the National Monuments Record of Scotland; (b) privatisation or contracting out of the entirety of the Royal Commission's activities is not feasible, although opportunities will continue to be taken to contract out discrete areas of work where this is cost-effective; (c) there are arguments for and against rationalisation or merger with other organisations dealing with built heritage or public record functions; in the absence however, or significant cost savings or a demonstrable increase in efficiency, the balance of advantage lies with the status quo; and (d) there is a continuing role for the Royal Commission and local authorities to play at the national and local levels respectively. I have arranged for a copy of the report to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

With these issues of principle now resolved, the second stage of the review will examine a number of organisational, management and finance issues. This will encompass the public services dimension to the Royal Commission's activities and liaison with local government.

I am writing to the Royal Commission's Chairman informing him that we concur with the report's conclusions.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the draft Skye Bridge Toll Order or the actual Order were made available for inspection in accordance with the Roads (Scotland) Act 1984; and if he will make a statement. [66339]

Mr. Macdonald: In accordance with Schedules 1 and 2 to the Roads (Scotland) Act 1984, the draft Order was made available for public inspection from 1 November to 13 December 1991 and the actual Order from 26 June to 7 August 1992.

Agricultural Business Improvement Scheme

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to publish the revised Agricultural Business Improvement Scheme; and if he will make a statement. [66452]

Mr. Macdonald: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Ross, Skye and Inverness, West (Mr. Kennedy) on 14 January 1999, Official Report, column 235.

Salmon Anaemia

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response the Minister with responsibility for agriculture, the environment and fisheries has given to the request of independent smolt producers for a meeting to discuss the impact upon the Scottish salmon industry of infectious salmon anaemia. [66453]

Mr. Macdonald: The request is being considered. My noble Friend is very conscious of the concerns that have arisen as a result of infectious salmon anaemia. He has already held several meetings on the matter with representatives of the fish farming industry, including smolt producers.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps have been taken to avoid conflicts of interest among those who provide advice to the public on behalf of Action 2000. [64712]

Mr. Wills: I understand that, to avoid potential conflicts of interest, in its advice and guidance material Action 2000 redirects wherever possible relevant inquiries to other sources of advice and suppliers of millennium products in the UK of which it is aware.

In addition, Action 2000 has a general policy not to allow its contractors or third party commercial organisations to use the Action 2000 name or logo to imply support or endorsement of any commercially available millennium product or service.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if it is a condition of the contract between Action 2000 and Data Dimensions Inc. that Data Dimensions Inc. shall not promote its own millennium compliance methodology product and associated courses; and if he will make a statement. [64711]

Mr. Wills: Action 2000 is an independent company set up by DTI to help UK businesses tackle the Millennium Bug.

I understand that in the contract with Data Dimensions Action 2000 has not included a condition preventing Data Dimensions from promoting their own millennium compliance methodology products and associated courses.

Action 2000 has a general policy of not allowing third party commercial organisations to use the Action 2000 name or logo to imply support or endorsement of their commercially available millennium products or services. It has not given Data Dimensions permission to use its contract with Action 2000 to imply support or endorsement by Action 2000 of its millennium compliance methodology products and associated courses.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what tendering process preceded the award by Action 2000 of a contract to Data Dimensions Inc. for the development of a database of providers of software products for millennium compliance; and on what date the contract was completed. [64710]

Mr. Wills: I understand that Action 2000 invited three companies to tender against a clearly defined Service Specification and according to normal DTI tendering rules. All respondents were visited prior to issue of the Invitation to Tender and invited to present their proposals to Action 2000 and an independent representative from Business Links.

All responses were analysed against objective service and commercial criteria. Data Dimensions was awarded the contract on the basis of:

Meeting the Action 2000 service requirement.

Realistic pricing with scope for flexibility.

Low commercial risk to Action 2000.

Credible supplier (particularly at being able to handle potentially large volumes of technical inquiries).

The contract was formally awarded on 14 September 1998. The new Year 2000 Software Status Service was delivered on time in October to specification and within budget.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make representations to the EU Commission concerning the reduction in population covered by assisted areas in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [65163]

Mr. Wills: The reduction in population coverage reflects the Commission Guidelines on national regional aid which were issued on 10 March 1997. The Guidelines are mandatory.

Competitiveness

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his Department's work to develop the UK as a high-productivity, high-skill knowledge economy. [65284]

Mr. Byers: The White Paper on competitiveness, "Our competitive future: building the knowledge driven economy", sets out an ambitious and wide-ranging programme for my Department to promote business competitiveness.

Amongst the proposals there will be new help for businesses to build their capabilities by promoting enterprise; exploiting science and technology; developing skills; and using information and communications technology. There will be substantial assistance to encourage business to collaborate, including funding for ten other sectors to follow the successful SMMT Industry Forum model and substantial backing for the CBI's Fit for the Future campaign to encourage a massive increase across the economy in take-up of best practice.

To provide the right environment in which business can compete, Government will promote open and competitive markets and crack down on harmful anti-competitive behaviour. My department will develop a new strategy to make the UK the leading country for electronic commerce, with legislation to remove legal barriers and support for an industry-led push to boost consumer confidence.

Consumer Credit Licences

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which an individual or business is required to obtain a consumer credit licence. [65588]

Dr. Howells: In general any business which provides credit under agreements which are regulated by the Consumer Credit Act 1974 is required to hold a consumer credit licence issued by the Director General of Fair Trading. The Act regulates agreements involving the granting of credit up to £25,000 to individuals, including sole traders and partnerships. Section 16 of the Act exempts some types of consumer credit agreement and businesses which only offer exempt agreements do not require a licence. Licences are also required by businesses and others who hire or lease out goods, arrange credit for others, collect debts, undertake debt adjusting and debt counselling, and by credit reference agencies.

Prepayment Gas Meters

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the percentage of pensioners who pay their domestic gas costs with prepayment meters. [65971]

Mr. Battle: A survey conducted during the summer of 1998, which was commissioned by Ofgas, estimated that approximately 2 per cent. of those aged over 65 use prepayment gas meters.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will establish a Government task force to promote renewable energy. [65777]

Mr. Battle: An advisory body already exists. The Renewable Energy Advisory Committee advises the Department of Trade and Industry on the aims, content, environmental appropriateness and economic applicability of the Department's new and renewable energy market enablement programme and policy on new and renewable energy. The committee's membership is drawn from industry, academia, local government, environmental bodies and Government. The DTI values the committee's work and has implemented its advice on the development of new and renewable energy.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the Government's progress in achieving 10 per cent. of the country's energy from renewable sources. [66076]

Mr. Battle: The Government are committed to a new and strong drive to develop renewable energy sources.

As a first step in our new and strong drive for renewables, I announced the fifth and largest Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation (NFFO-5) Order of 1177 MW on 24 September 1998. A third Scottish Renewables Obligation Order (SRO-3) will be made on 7 February 1999, probably for between 110–120 MW.

Today about 2 per cent. of our electricity comes from renewables, mostly from large scale hydro. NFFO Orders already laid or in train will add a further 3 per cent. by around 2002 or 2003. The challenge is to move from about 5 per cent. in 2003 to 10 per cent. by 2010. I have therefore instigated a review to consider what would be necessary and practicable to achieve this. I expect to publish a consultation document on the review shortly.

I have already reversed the planned cuts in the renewables programme budget which the previous Government had made, so that the renewables programme budget for this year (1998–99) has been maintained at £11.1 million. The Engineering and Physical Science Research Council (EPSRC) also supports work on new and renewable energy, spending about £1 million a year on its Photovoltaics programme alone and expects to launch a new programme on "Renewables and New Energy Technologies" later this year (£3.5 million a year).

Grid Access

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans his Department has to simplify procedures for grid access for small renewable generating companies. [65778]

Mr. Battle: My Department's new and renewable energy programme has supported a number of studies, involving both renewable generating companies and the electricity supply industry, with the aim of encouraging the development of commercial and regulatory frameworks for electricity supply that allow renewable generators to compete with more established generation methods on a fair and unbiased footing.

To give only one example of the work being undertaken, we are supporting a project entitled Technical Criteria for Electrical Integration of Photovoltaic (PV) Systems into Electricity Supply Networks (ETSU contract number S/P2/00215/00/00) which includes the holding of regular meetings with a consultative group of Regional Electricity Companies (RECs) and will involve the production of a guide to be entitled, "UK Technical Guidelines for Inverter Connected Single Phase PV Generators up to 5kVA".

Electricity Pool

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if it is his intention to introduce reform of the electricity pool system by the first half of the year 2000. [65633]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 14 January 1999]: It is my intention to proceed with these reforms as soon as it is possible to do so. The Programme Director responsible for the process of implementing new trading arrangements is currently examining the steps required to meet the suggested target implementation date of 1 April 2000 contained in OFFER's Proposals document published in July 1998. He will provide further advice on the timing of implementation in due course.

Branded Products (Discounts)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what papers relating to British retailers wishing to sell branded products at discount prices were brought to the previous Secretary of State's attention. [65642]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 14 January 1999]: My right hon. Friend the previous Secretary of State and his ministerial colleagues saw numerous papers in the normal course of business, a number of which touched on pricing issues.

BSkyB (Manchester United)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if any papers relating to BSkyB's proposed takeover of Manchester United were brought to his predecessor's attention. [65641]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 14 January 1999]: In the course of deciding whether to refer BSkyB's proposed acquisition of Manchester United to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, my right hon. Friend naturally considered relevant papers, in particular the advice submitted to him by the Director General of Fair Trading.

Mergers

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the current number of proposed mergers. [65629]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 14 January 1999]: There are some twenty proposed mergers presently under consideration by the DGFT.

Digital Broadcasting

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the competition policy implications of the establishment of a publicly funded digital broadcast service to support the GCSE curriculum. [65692]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 14 January 1999]: The Department for Education and Employment has invited companies with a broadcasting or transmission licence and experience in the provision of educational broadcast material to submit tenders on a competitive basis for the provision of specific digital broadcast services to support the GCSE curriculum. I understand that a copy of the invitation to tender is being deposited in the Library of the House.

I am not aware that there are any competition policy implications arising from this exercise. In the first instance any concerns of this nature should be brought to the attention of the Department for Education and Employment.

Defence Mergers

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will make a statement on his policy towards large-scale mergers in the United Kingdom defence industry; [65617]

(2) what plans he has to encourage competition in the United Kingdom defence industry. [65625]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 14 January 1999]: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has made clear since his statement with the French and German Heads of Government in December 1997, there is an urgent need to restructure the aerospace and defence industries in Europe to compete in world markets.

It is for industry itself, not Government, to make specific proposals for restructuring. Any resulting merger would be considered on its own merits by the relevant competition authorities.

Power Generation

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what appraisal he has made of the implications of the expansion of power generation through combined cycle gas turbines not fitted with an automatic governor response for the security of the national grid network. [65985]

Mr. Battle: The Government have not made any appraisal of the issue mentioned, since all combined cycle gas turbines connected to the National Grid Company's transmission system are required under the Grid Code to have automatic governors fitted. The Government have, however, established a steering group to take forward work on a number of other system security and stability measures (black start, frequency response, load following, and reactive power), as proposed in the October 1998 White Paper Conclusions of the Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation and Government Response to fourth and fifth Reports of the Trade and Industry Committee. This group will also consider the impact on the Grid of plant which is not connected to it and which is not, therefore, bound by the Grid Code.

Consumer Representation

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will announce the Government's response to the recent consultation exercise on consumer representation in the gas and electricity industries. [65984]

Mr. Battle: The recent consultation exercise covered the arrangements for consumer representation in the telecommunications and water sectors, as well as the gas and electricity industries. I expect to be able to announce the Government's response to the consultation shortly.

Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what arrangements are being made to return to Japan nuclear materials recovered from reprocessing Japanese spent nuclear fuel at BNFL's Sellafield plant. [66647]

Mr. Battle: The Government have been consulting the Government of Japan for some time about arrangements for returning the nuclear materials, including plutonium, recovered from reprocessing Japanese spent nuclear fuel at Sellafield. This is in keeping with the terms of the letters exchanged between the two Governments in 1978 in support of reprocessing contracts between Japanese utilities and BNFL and the policy of successive Governments.

The Government of Japan's preferred means of using the recovered plutonium is for it to be converted into Mixed Oxide (MOX) fuel for use in Japanese nuclear power stations. The MOX fuel, including material produced by BNFL's counterpart COGEMA in France, will be returned by sea and carried by UK-flagged transport ships belonging to Pacific Nuclear Transport Ltd. (PNTL), a subsidiary of BNFL.

The purpose of the consultations between the UK and Japan has been to ensure that appropriate measures are put in place for the physical protection of the material in line with internationally agreed commitments and recommendations on physical protection and reflecting the concern of all parties to prevent the proliferation of sensitive nuclear materials. This includes compliance with the recommendation of the International Atomic Energy Agency that MOX fuel, like all other Category 1 nuclear material, should be accompanied during transport by an armed security escort.

All plutonium recovered from Japanese spent fuel reprocessed in Europe originates from uranium which was enriched in the US. Because of this, it falls within US rules of origin under which the US retains certain rights and responsibilities over its retransfer. This means that plans for the transport of MOX fuel from Europe to Japan by sea must comply with specific US requirements concerning safety and physical protection. These are set out in the 1988 US-Japan agreement on nuclear co-operation and include the requirement either that the transport ship should be accompanied by an armed escort vessel or that alternative security measures acceptable to the US should be in place.

The security arrangements currently under discussion with Japan and the US would involved 2 PNTL transport ships travelling together for mutual protection. Each would carry armaments, for defensive use only, under the control of specially trained officers of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority Constabulary. These security provisions are solely for protecting the ships, their crew and their cargo in the extremely unlikely eventuality of an armed assault by terrorists.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what financial assistance and grants are available from his Department to engineering companies in South Lancashire. [66028]

Mr. Wills: Within the Assisted Area in Lancashire, RSA is available to almost all businesses investing in manufacturing, as also to businesses in the service industry which serve a wider rather than a local market.

Business Links and TECs also have a wide range of business support services available to companies throughout Lancashire.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assistance his Department offers to indigenous British industries that wish to expand their operations. [66027]

Mr. Wills: The main form of assistance provided by the Department is Regional Selective Assistance. The scheme offers grants on a selective basis to firms planning new investment which creates or safeguards jobs in the Assisted Areas. In the last financial year (1997–98) around £65 million of grant was offered to UK owned firms in England.

Regional Development Agencies

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the level of funding from the regional development agencies for rural areas. [65110]

Mr. Meale: I have been asked to reply.

The Department has received a number of representations on this issue. However, in the White Paper on the Regions, "Building Partnerships for Prosperity", the Government made it clear that their strong commitment to rural regeneration would continue to be reflected in the RDAs' funding for rural areas. There will be separate allocations for rural funding, and an integrated rural regeneration element of the Single Regeneration Budget.

TREASURY

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the extent to which those who move from welfare to work as a result of the working families tax credit will (a) move into newly created jobs and (b) displace existing employees; and in the case of displacement, what assessment he has made of the characteristics of those who are likely to be displaced. [63660]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 14 December 1998]: The Working Families Tax Credit and the associated Childcare Tax Credit are designed to (a) make work more attractive for those currently out of employment and (b) enable one and two parent families to increase the hours they work by assisting with costs of childcare. These are part of a range of new measures which should together assist people in moving from welfare to work. The Government are undertaking considerable preparatory work ahead of the introduction of WFTC in October, but no reliable assessment of either the number of people moving into newly created jobs or displacement of existing employees can be made.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate his Department has made of how many people will be eligible for the working families tax credit when it is fully operational. [63189]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 11 January 1999]: It is estimated that in 2000–01, the first full year of the Working Families Tax Credit, about 1.3 million families will be in receipt of the credit.

Taxation (Savings)

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is intended that the proposals for a directive on the taxation of savings as announced in the European Council Conclusions (Vienna 11 and 12 December) should involve an investigation of the differing income tax regimes of member states in respect of the taxation of savings and the differing rates of income tax thereon. [64641]

Dawn Primarolo: No. The draft directive on the taxation of savings which is currently under consideration in Brussels would not affect the way income from savings is treated in national income tax systems.

Business Taxes

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of additional sums which would be raised in the United Kingdom if the German proposal for alignment of business taxes were implemented on the basis of current German levels. [64806]

Dawn Primarolo: No such estimate has been made. There is no German proposal for alignment of business taxes.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Maples: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 27 November 1998, Official Report, column 23, for what reasons he was unable to provide the specific information requested. [64722]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 11 January 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave him on 19 November 1998, Official Report, column 849.

Teenage Suicides (Surrey)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many teenage suicides have occurred in South-West Surrey since 1995. [65575]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mrs. Virginia Bottomley, dated 18 January 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentry question asking how many teenage suicides have occurred in South West Surrey since 1995.

Number of deaths certified as due to suicide and undetermined injury occurring to teenage residents of South West Surrey, 1995–97

Year of occurrence	Number of suicides	Number of undetermined deaths

Notes:

1. Teenagers were identified as between 13 and 19 years of age.
2. South West Surrey was taken as the constituency of the same name.
3. The table includes deaths given an open verdict and coded to "death from injury and poisoning undetermined whether accidentally or purposely inflicted", in addition to those given a suicide verdict, as it is likely that most undetermined deaths among 'adults' (15 and over) are cases where the harm was self-inflicted but there was insufficient evidence to prove that the deceased deliberately intended to kill themselves.

Mutual Building Societies

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the impact of a reduction in the mutual building society sector on the housing market. [65572]

Ms Hewitt: I have not commissioned any research into this issue, although my officials, along with those at the Bank of England and the Building Societies Commission, do keep the market under review.

Mortgages

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has made of the relative costs of mortgages from (a) commercial banks and (b) building societies. [65569]

Ms Hewitt: Estimates of the basic rates charged for a mortgage by banks or building societies are available in Table 7.1L of the 'Financial Statistics' monthly report produced by The Office for National Statistics, a copy of which is available in the House Library.

The industry's trade body, the Council of Mortgage Lenders, also publish figures once a quarter.

Inflation

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the appropriate measure of inflation for defining the inflation target; and if he plans to introduce an inflation target defined in terms of the harmonised index of consumer prices. [65678]

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to adopt the Harmonised Index of Consumer Prices as a target measure for inflation. [66054]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set an inflation target for the Bank of England cast in terms of the harmonised index of consumer prices, as recommended to him by the IMF in their annual Article IV assessment of British economic policy. [66425]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 14 January 1999]: The Bank of England Act 1998 requires the Treasury to specify what price stability is to be taken to consist of at least once in every period of 12 months. In his last Budget on 17 March 1998, Official Report, column 1098, the Chancellor confirmed the Government's inflation target is 2½ per cent. defined by the 12-month increase in the RPI excluding mortgage interest payments (RPIX).

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions (Computer Changeover)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, in relation to North Staffordshire Benefits Agency, how many persons pension contributions have not been processed due to delays arising from the changeover of the computer dealing with retirement pension rights; what the reason is for the further projected delay in the changeover of the computer; what is the new projected date for the new computer to be in full working order; and what arrangements he has put in place to cover the period during which the computer is inoperative; how these arrangements have worked; and if he will make a statement. [65371]

Mr. Timms: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security in his Written Answer on 4 November 1998, Official Report, columns 603–06, advised the House that the Contributions Agency had introduced a new National Insurance Recording Computer System. During the first year of operation the system is being introduced through a series of pilots leading to national implementation.

Progress has been made against plans to move pilots into national operation. The NIRS2 link to the Jobseeker's Allowance computer system was implemented nationally on 9 November 1998 and new claims are now being dealt with through the normal interface between the two systems. The NIRS2 reports used for Incapacity Benefit were implemented nationally on 18 November 1998. Reports are being carefully screened before being released to Benefit Agency local offices.

Retirement Pensions and Widows Benefit calculation facilities became nationally available on 6 January 1999. The Benefits Agency is continuing to make initial awards of Retirement Pension and emergency payments to widows and those claiming Retirement Pension where no record of the contribution history is available.

The Benefits Agency has continued to identify and distribute claim packs automatically to those individuals approaching pension age using information from the previous National Insurance Recording system (NIRS). All initial awards of Retirement Pension have been calculated using the information from the old NIRS system. This contingency arrangement has worked well since the conversion to the new NIRS2 system began on the 19 June 1998. 97 per cent. of all claims to Retirement Pension have been processed using information from NIRS. Initial awards made since April 1998 will be reviewed when the 1997/98 National Insurance Contribution information has been posted to account. The Benefits Agency hopes to begin reviewing these claims from April 1999.

The Benefits Agency has increased the capacity to calculate clerically entitlement to State Earnings Related Pension Scheme for people who request it. 3,500 such calculations have been completed.

On 4 November 1998, Official Report, columns 603–06, I reported that over 14 million National Insurance contributions for 1997/98 had been recorded on individual accounts. On 11 January the number of contribution items posted had risen to 31 million. We normally expect to record about 47 million contributions each year by the end of December. We hope to have recorded the balance by March 1999.

On 4 January 1999 the cumulative total of age-related rebate payments, paid to Occupational and Personal Pension Schemes in respect of individual scheme members in this financial year, increased from £630 million to £1,411 million, nearly 60 per cent. of the expected total for the year. This includes the December payment of £385.57 million and the January payment of £392 million. The figure includes a compensation element to compensate individual scheme members for any loss of investment income because of delayed payments.

By 31 December 1998, the cumulative total of contributions collected from the self-employed through Direct Debit and Quarterly Billing facilities in this financial year had increased to £342.5 million. In December £34.25 million was collected from 1.34 million self-employed contributors who pay contributions by Direct Debit and in January a further £42.3 million has been requested.

Scottish Juvenile registrations, for issuing National Insurance numbers, were processed and the plastic National Insurance Number (NINO) cards are currently being issued. Adult registrations are currently being processed using the NIRS2 on-line facility and plastic NINO cards are being issued.

New registration facilities for self-employed people, who want to pay their contributions by monthly Direct Debit, are being piloted. New registration facilities for self-employed people who pay contributions quarterly became available to specialist staff in Contributions Agency from 14 December 1998.

From the first Monday of the new benefit year, 4 January 1999, new claims to Incapacity Benefit and Jobseeker's Allowance are being based on contributions paid during the 1996/97 and 1997/98 tax years. It is estimated that 65 per cent. of the relevant 1997/98 contributions have been posted to NIRS2. Whilst the remaining 1997/98 contributions are still being recorded in NIRS2, information to pay some new claims will need to be obtained from other sources.

The expected number of claims in January 1999 where contribution information will need to be obtained from other sources for Jobseeker's Allowance will be approximately 75,000 and for Incapacity Benefit approximately 21,000. These figures will be lower in February and March because additional National Insurance contribution information will be available on NIRS2, and by April 1999 all the National Insurance contributions needed should be available on the system. Claims will be automatically reviewed when 1997/98 National Insurance Contributions are posted.

There are long-standing contingency instructions in place to deal with these cases, and the Benefits Agency will advise customers if any additional information is required to deal with their claims. Both Jobseeker's Allowance and Incapacity Benefit contingency arrangements are in place from 4 January 1999.

Considerable effort has been jointly made by DSS Agencies, pensions industry and Andersen Consulting to maintain service levels. Staff from the Contributions Agency, Benefits Agency and Andersen Consulting were working together throughout the Christmas period to resolve the outstanding problems.

All the work involved is being taken forward through a co-ordinated plan agreed between the DSS Agencies involved and Andersen Consulting. Within the plan, priority is being given to those aspects of the NIRS2 system, which most directly affect benefit claims. I continue to expect that it will take until the end of this financial year to resume normal operations in full, and it will take longer to catch up on all backlogs. I shall keep the House informed of progress.

Independent Tribunal Service

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what steps are taken to ensure access for disabled people to buildings used to hold Disability Living Allowance Independent Tribunal Service hearings; [65261]

(2) what training employees of the Independent Tribunal Service receive to ensure that they are aware of the special needs of people with a disability. [65271]

Angela Eagle: The Council on Tribunals (CoT) produce a code of practice entitled "Access for Disabled People Using Tribunals" to which the Independent Tribunal Service (ITS) fully adheres in relation to its own tribunal premises. Appeals involving Disability Living Allowance are heard by Disability Appeal Tribunals (DATs), and these tribunals sit only in premises containing appropriate facilities for disabled people. Such facilities include car-parking spaces, access ramps, internal lifts and furnishings and fittings suitable for disabled people whilst both sitting in and moving around the premises.

ITS operates an equal opportunities policy of which an essential element is an awareness of the needs of people with disabilities. This policy is explained to all new members of the administrative staff early in their induction training and reinforced at regular intervals thereafter, whilst tribunal clerks, who deal face-to-face with disabled appellants, are given more detailed supplementary training. An Equal Opportunities Officer is based in Nottingham, whose role is to monitor changes in policy and practice and to provide regular updates to all staff.

Judicial Officers of ITS—that is, tribunal chairmen and members—whilst not direct employees, also receive training in various aspects of human awareness and interpersonal skills, including the needs of people with disabilities. This, too, is delivered initially as part of the induction training for new appointees and subsequently incorporated into regular "refresher" training programmes at both local and national level.

Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects take-up of stakeholder pensions to reach (a) 500,000, (b) 1 million, (c) 1.5 million and (d) 2 million; and what estimate he has made of the eventual level of take-up of stakeholder pensions. [65420]

Mr. Timms: The take-up of Stakeholder Pensions will depend on a number of factors and cannot be reliably predicted. There are estimated to be in the region of 5 million potential beneficiaries earning between £9,000 and £20,000 per annum: over 2 million people currently in SERPS, 2 million who currently have Appropriate Personal Pensions, and 1 million self employed people (some with personal pensions).

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what basis the figure of £9,000 per year was chosen as the value below which individuals would not be encouraged to take out stakeholder pensions. [65576]

Mr. Timms: The figure of £9,000 was judged to be broadly the annual earnings level where, at current levels of compulsion, pension contributions would be sufficient to make funded pensions cost-effective. This was based on a range of information, including minimum contribution levels used for the sale of personal pensions.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update his estimates based on the Family Resources Survey 1996–97 of (a) median pensioner incomes, excluding means-tested benefits, by age, sex and marital status, consistent with his answer of 12 November 1998, Official Report, columns 295–98, and (b) the size of each group. [65581]

Mr. Timms: The information is set out in the tables.

Pensioner units' median gross income excluding means-tested benefits, by age

£ per week

1996–97	Age
	60–64	65–69	70–74	75–79	80 and over
Single male pensioners	n/a	122	121	104	95
Single female pensioners	116	99	94	85	85
Pensioner couples	n/a	239	206	181	167

Notes:

1. All amounts are in £s per week at July 1996 prices. They are rounded to the nearest £1, although estimates are not necessarily accurate to this level.
2. Estimates are for pensioner units. A pensioner unit is defined as a single (non-cohabiting) person over State Pension Age (65 years or above for men and 60 years or above for women), or a couple (married or cohabiting) where the man, defined as the head, is over State Pension Age. Estimates for pensioner couples are broken down by the age of the man.
3. Estimates marked 'n/a' are not applicable. Single men and couples are defined as Pensioner Units only if the man is aged 65 years or above.
4. Means-tested benefits are defined as Income Support, Family Credit, Council Tax Benefit and Housing Benefit.
5. Levels of means-tested benefit may be particularly affected by mis-reporting as receipt of State Retirement Pension and receipt of Income Support are often confused in the FRS.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many old age pensioners who have become eligible for their benefit since 1 October have not received their pension, and for what reason; and what explanation, or notification, has been given to them as to when they may expect to be paid. [66467]

Mr. Timms: People entitled to Retirement Pension since 1 October 1998 will have received their pension provided they have made a claim. If the contribution record to determine their claims could not be obtained because of the difficulties with the NIRS2, they will have been offered emergency payments and told the reason. I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security gave the hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. Rendel) on 4 November 1998, Official Report, columns 603–06. It is estimated that 3 per cent. of claims fall into this category; this relates to about 1,500 claims a month (or 4,500 between October and December 1998).

Income Support

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the cost in each of the next 10 financial years of linking the rate of income support for pensioners to earnings rather than prices. [65424]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the form requested.

In April 1999 the Income Support rate for pensioners will be increased by more than if they had been uprated by earnings.

On this basis the estimated cost to the Income Related benefits of increasing the rate of Income Support (IS) for pensioners by earnings rather than prices would be approximately £250 million in 2000–01 and £520 million in 2001–02. These figures are based on departmental forecasts of the future number of pensioners on Income Related Benefits. Estimated forecasts beyond 2001–02 are not routinely provided on an annual basis, and to do so would incur disproportionate costs.

However, long-term figures on the costs to income related benefits have been estimated using PENSIM, a dynamic simulation model that projects pensioners' incomes into the next century. For illustrative purposes the estimated cost of uprating IS for pensioners in line with earnings by 2010, based on PENSIM, would be around £3.5 billion in today's prices. PENSIM estimates, however, are based on a number of economic and behavioural assumptions. Due to the reliance on assumptions and the time period covered, estimates should be treated with caution, and have been heavily rounded.

Notes:

1. Estimates for 2000–01 and 2001–02 are in cash terms. The estimated cost in 2010 is for illustrative purposes and shown in constant prices. This is consistent with other PENSIM figures in the public domain.

2. Short-term estimates have been rounded to the nearest £10, and the estimate for 2010 is rounded to the nearest half a billion to reflect the uncertainty of the estimate.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to publish the findings on the pilot studies on income support take-up. [66128]

Angela Eagle: The evaluation of the Income Support take-up pilots is currently underway. Results are expected before the Spring and publication will follow as soon as possible after that.

Fraud

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many small-scale frauds have been prosecuted, and how many prosecutions have been successful, since the publication of the Green Paper "Beating Fraud is Everyone's Business" in July; and what the equivalent figures were for each of the previous five years. [65440]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 14 January 1999]: As yet we have made no provision to break down national prosecution statistics by the amount of overpayment involved. Keeping the value of a fraud is no guarantee that a fraudster will not be prosecuted. The amount involved is only one of the factors considered when deciding whether it is appropriate to prosecute an individual case.

We shall respond shortly to the consultation on the Green Paper.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps have been taken to implement plans to improve the security culture of staff with particular reference to relating performance appraisal and performance-related pay to security. [65456]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 14 January 1999]: The Department's Agencies are taking forward a number of activities to promote security awareness and to ensure that where appropriate, security features are included in key work objectives and in the performance appraisal system.

State Pension

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if it is the Government's eventual aim to have the basic state pension increased in line with average earnings. [65882]

Mr. Timms: The basic State pension will remain a key building block of the pension system and will continue to be increased at least in line with prices.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many British citizens live in countries in which their British state retirement pension is (a) uprated annually and (b) not uprated annually. [66097]

Mr. Timms: Around 390,000 pensioners living abroad receive a United Kingdom basic State Pension, which is uprated annually. Around 450,000 receive a basic UK State Pension which is frozen, either at the rate paid on leaving the UK or, if already living abroad, at the rate when first awarded.

Transfer of Information

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's policy on the confidential transfer of information on the names of persons in receipt of means-tested benefits from his Department to individual education authorities solely in order to permit the education authority to establish the number of children in its area who qualify for free school meals. [65815]

Angela Eagle: The Department would not normally disclose confidential personal information to a local education authority without the consent of the individual concerned.

Cross-party Co-operation

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions he has had with (a) the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) and (b) other Liberal Democrat hon. and right hon. Members concerning the development of Government policy on pensions. [65817]

Mr. Darling: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer I gave him on 14 January 1998, Official Report, column 270.

Contributions Agency

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the estimated costs to the Contributions Agency associated with clearing the current backlogs which have occurred as a result of delays in implementing the NIRS II system. [65992]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available.

The Department's Agencies involved and Andersen Consulting have been working to an agreed plan to stabilise the system. As many of the milestones in this plan have been achieved recovery plans are now being drawn up. This planning needs to be progressed further before a cost can be associated to the recovery exercise.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the amount of compensation likely to be paid to personal pension providers by the Contributions Agency, as a result of delays in implementing the NIRS II system. [65991]

Mr. Timms: The total amount of compensation to be paid to Occupational and Personal Pension Schemes on behalf of their scheme members will be determined by the date on which the posting of 1997–98 Class 1 Contributions is completed. Progress has been made and it is anticipated that the contribution information held for that year should be posted by April 1999.

It is estimated that the total amount of compensation to be paid will be between £35 and £40 million.

Benefit Payments

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what date the agreement with the Post Office not to redirect benefit payments came into operation for each region of the country. [66127]

Angela Eagle: The national agreement with the Post Office not to redirect Social Security related local authority post will come into operation from 1 February 1999. All local authorities will be invited to participate in the initiative later this month.

Incomes

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the numbers currently below the lower earning threshold of national insurance and the number estimated in this category for each of the five decades following the introduction of the state second pension. [65172]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 11 January 1999]: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Frank Field, dated 18 January 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question about people earning less than the lower earnings threshold for National Insurance contributions.

The latest estimates available from the UK Labour Force Survey are that, in summer 1998, 2,367,000 employees earned less than £64 per week (the lower limit for Class 1 National Insurance contributions in the current tax year). The vast majority of these, 2,174,000, worked part-time.

Projections for future years are not available.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

A. Hacker and M. Yeoman

Mr. Steen: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects to receive the report from the Director of Public Prosecutions regarding the conduct of the Crown Prosecution Service in relation to the case R v. A. Hacker and M. Yeoman tried at the Plymouth Crown Court on 6 January concerning a domestic burglary in Salcombe; and if he will make a statement on the conduct of this case. [66109]

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions received reports about the case of R v. Hacker and Yeoman in December 1998 and on 11 January 1999. The Director of Public Prosecutions wrote to the hon. Member on 11 December 1998. I have seen those reports for the purpose of answering this Question. However, the DPP has statutory responsibility for the casework of the Crown Prosecution Service and he will be writing further to the hon. Member.

HEALTH

Departmental Staff

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) the (i) task forces, (ii) review panels and (iii) advisory groups his Department has, (b) the remit of each and (c) the members of each together with their principal employment and their level of remuneration. [62810]

Mr. Denham: Copies of the information requested about the task forces and review panels have been placed in the Library. Information on advisory groups could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Solar Eclipse

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assistance his Department will offer to Cornwall in dealing with problems that may arise from the total eclipse of the sun on 11 August 1999. [65034]

Mr. Denham: Officials from the South West Regional Office of the National Health Service Executive are already working together with the local health authorities and NHS trusts, and other local bodies, to ensure that the NHS has adequate plans in place to meet the demands placed on it during the period of the eclipse.

Isles of Scilly

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial support is available to Scilly Islands residents travelling to mainland hospitals for specialist treatment and advice. [65274]

Mr. Denham: Residents from the Isles of Scilly requiring treatment at mainland hospitals are reimbursed the cost of the flight from the Isles of Scilly to Penzance, less a £5 contribution. Residents claiming income support are reimbursed the full cost of the flight. These payments are made by the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly Health Authority from their own resources. The health authority does not receive additional funding for these payments.

Senior Medical Practitioners

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will break down the costs of all suspensions of senior medical practitioners on full pay for each of the last five years between (a) legal costs, (b) administration costs, (c) salaries paid to those on suspension and (d) any other costs; [65250]

(2) how many NHS suspended senior medical practitioners have been (a) disciplined, (b) after investigations cleared of any allegations against them and (c) had any proceedings against them dropped, in each of the last five years; and how many of those personnel subsequently continued in the employment of the health authority or trust concerned. [65251]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally. The National Health Service Executive monitors doctors suspended for more than six months. Since 31 March 1995, a total of 44 cases of suspension lasting over six months have been reported. As at 30 September 1998, the latest date for which figures are available, 14 hospital and community medical and dental staff, including 9 consultants, have been suspended for over six months. Decisions on whether to suspend, or discipline, a medical practitioner rest with the employing authority or trust. Hospital doctors who are suspended from duty will, in most cases, continue to receive full pay during the period of suspension. The NHS Executive is reviewing current suspension procedures.

NHS Boards

Mr. Denis Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nominations have been received in calendar year 1998 for non-executive posts on NHS boards, indicating (a) the percentage of nominations which have been for (i) women, (ii) people with disabilities and (iii) people from ethnic minorities and (b) the number of persons who have been appointed to non-executive posts on NHS boards and the percentage of those who are (1) women, (2) people with disabilities and (3) people from ethnic minorities. [65038]

Mr. Denham: A total of 3,258 applications were received for appointments to be made in 1998 in response to a national advertisement and as a result of nominations by hon. Members and local authorities. Of these, 33.9 per cent. were from women, 3.2 per cent. were from those who declared they had a disability and 10.7 per cent. were people from the ethnic minorities.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State subsequently made 1,490 appointments in 1998 to National Health Service trusts and health authorities. Of these, 50.2 per cent. were women, 11.4 per cent. were from the ethnic minorities and 1.5 per cent. declared they had a disability.

Inequalities Report

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations he has had with (a) the Chancellor of the Exchequer and (b) the Secretary of State for Social Security on Part 2 (1) of the report of the independent inquiry into inequalities in health chaired by Sir Donald Acheson. [64814]

Ms Jowell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have had consultations about the report of the Independent Inquiry into Inequalities in Health (the Acheson report) with a number of our Ministerial colleagues, including my right hon. Friends the Chief Secretary to the Treasury and the Secretary of State for Social Security.

The Acheson report was considered in Cabinet sub-committee prior to its publication. Since then our officials have been in close touch with their counterparts across Whitehall about the report's recommendations. We made it clear at the time of publication that the whole Government were committed to reducing health inequalities and that the Acheson report was an important contribution to that process.

Learning Difficulties

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the NHS budget was spent on the care of patients with learning difficulties in each of the last five years. [65486]

Mr. Denham: The following is the information:

Expenditure on the care of patients with learning difficulties 1993–94 to 1997–98

Year	Expenditure on learning difficulties[1]	Total revenue expenditure[2]	Proportion of total revenue expenditure on learning difficulties per cent.
1993–94	1,132,664	28,860,577	3.92
1994–95	1,126,667	30,271,914	3.72
1995–96	1,157,673	32,162,568	3.60
1996–97	1,234,718	31,612,941	3.91
1997–98	1,285,627	33,269,629	3.86

[1] 1993–94 to 1995–96 health authority financial returns. 1996–97 and 1997–98 health authority annual accounts.

[2] Summarised accounts of the regional and district health authorities and special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals and family health services authorities, 1993–94 to 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98.

Health Trust and Authority Appointments

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of appointments to health trusts and health authorities in 1998 were not filled by re-appointment or new appointment immediately upon the completion of the period of service of the existing incumbent; how many such vacancies currently exist; and if he will make a statement. [65660]

Mr. Denham: In 1998, 555 appointments to National Health Service trusts and 318 appointments to health authorities were due to be made when the term of office of a chair or non-executive expired. 17.1 per cent. of the NHS trust appointments and 22.6 per cent. of the health authority appointments were not made before the due date. At 12 January 1999, 8.8 per cent. of the NHS trust and 2.5 per cent. of the health authority appointments remained unfilled. Great efforts are always made to ensure that all appointments are made on time. Any delays are due to the need to ensure that the right person is chosen for the job.

Older People

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the work force issues identified by the Health Advisory Service 2000 report, "Not Because They Are Old", with particular reference to staffing levels, skill mix, education and development, management arrangements and support systems. [65322]

Mr. Denham (holding answer 14 January 1999): We are taking a number of steps which will help to address issues raised in the report. These include the publication of the framework for the management of human resources for the whole of the National Health Service, "Working Together, securing a quality work force for the NHS", which sets targets for local employers in areas such as improved recruitment and retention. We have also consulted widely on modern arrangements to underpin quality in the NHS including the development of lifelong learning and will be issuing guidance on continuing professional development.

Dentists

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to improve the procedures for the establishment of new NHS dentists with particular reference to the length of time taken to reach a decision. [66056]

Mr. Denham: The vast majority of dentists are self-employed, and it is therefore up to them where and when they establish themselves. The establishment of Personal Dental Services pilots requires the approval of the Secretary of State, and we have no plans to change this process. Funding through the Investing In Dentistry scheme, which may result in new practices being set up, is also approved by the Secretary of State, and we are considering whether the operation of this scheme can be improved.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has recently received from (a) right hon. and hon. Members and (b) others in relation to the Medicines Control Agency Consultation Document MLX 249; and how many of these representations (a) broadly supported and (b) broadly opposed the detail of the proposals. [65723]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 14 January 1999]: We have received 69 letters from hon. and right hon. Members and 278 representations from other interested bodies and individuals. Three representations broadly support the proposals. The remainder are critical of the proposals to some degree.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to extend the powers of the Medicines Control Agency; and if he will make a statement. [66362]

Ms Jowell: The powers of the licensing authority, of which the Medicines Control Agency is an executive arm, are set out in the Medicines Act 1968 and secondary legislation including the Medicines for Human Use (Marketing Authorisations Etc.) Regulations 1994. There are no plans to extend those powers.

However, the MCA's Consultation Letter MLX 249 proposes amendments to these Regulations. The proposed amendments relate to a new statutory procedure for determinations by the licensing authority of whether a product is a medicinal product requiring licensing. The procedure would allow for representations to be made against a provisional determination that a product requires licensing. If a final determination is made, it will be sufficient evidence for the purposes of legal proceedings that the product requires licensing under the Regulations, unless it can be shown that the determination was made unreasonably or has been annulled. There is a further proposal that, when a final determination has been made that a product requires licensing, the licensing authority be able to serve a notice in writing on a person requiring that he refrain from placing the product on the market or otherwise marketing the product, and that it be an offence to breach such a notice. Decisions of the licensing authority would be subject to judicial review or other challenge in the civil courts.

When consideration of responses to the consultation is complete, we will consider whether and what legislative proposals should be put before Parliament.

Neurology Services

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the average waiting times for out-patient appointments in neurology clinics in each of the last two years for which figures are available. [66060]

Mr. Denham: Data on average waiting times for outpatient appointments are not collected centrally. However, data are available on the percentage of patients seen within 13 weeks and 26 weeks of written general practitioner referral and the table provides this information for 1996–97, 1997–98 and the first two quarters of 1998–99.

Waiting times for neurology first outpatient appointments: Trust based (England)

Year	Quarter	Of those GP written referrals seen, the percentage who waited: less than 13 weeks	less than 26 weeks
1996–97	3	69	95
1996–97	4	69	95
1997–98	1	73	95
1997–98	2	70	95
1997–98	3	68	93
1997–98	4	67	92
1998–99	1	68	92
1998–99	2	66	92

Portsmouth NHS Hospitals Trust

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with (a) Portsmouth NHS Hospitals Trust, (b) Portsmouth & SE Hants Health Authority and (c) others this year about the admissions and treatment of patients at Portsmouth hospitals; what actions he has taken; and what plans he has to visit hospitals in Portsmouth. [65750]

Mr. Denham: We have expressed our thanks to all those working in the National Health Services for the huge effort they have put in to make sure everyone is getting the treatment and care they need over the winter months.

An extra £1.672 million has been allocated to Portsmouth and South East Hampshire Health Authority to help them cope with winter pressures. The South East Regional Office of the National Health Service Executive has been working closely with the local national Health Service in Portsmouth about the admission and treatment of patients this year, and will continue to do so.

We have no plans at present to visit hospitals in this area.

Primary Care Groups

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the number of general practitioner appointments with patients which will be lost each year as a result of general practitioner participation in the administration of primary care groups; [65920]

(2) what resources he is making available to general practitioner surgeries to allow them to replace general practitioner time taken up in administration of primary care groups; [65921]

(3) what resources he has made available for repaying the expenses of provisionally appointed members of primary care groups up to 1 April 1999. [65922]

Mr. Denham: We have allocated £135 million to health authorities as a central contribution towards health authorities funding of the running costs of primary care groups in 1999–2000. Some of this will be used by Primary Care Groups to fund locum or other costs incurred by general practitioner primary care group board members. In addition we have made available £31 million this financial year to health authorities to help support the development of primary care groups.

We have agreed that locum/compensatory payments can be paid to practices to enable them to cover such absences. In some cases cover will be provided from within the practice. We therefore do not expect any deterioration in the quality or level of service to patients to result from GP membership of primary care groups. Indeed we are confident that Primary Care Groups will lead to improvements in services to patients. One of their key functions is to develop primary care.

Long-term Care

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the Royal Commission's report into the funding of long-term care. [66110]

Mr. Hutton: We understand that the Royal Commission is finalising its work, and its report should be published shortly.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to control the costs of Meat Hygiene Service inspections. [64284]

Mr. Rooker: Two of the principal objectives of the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) are to deliver value for money in the provision of efficient and high quality services and to achieve the financial and performance targets set by Ministers. Indeed the Agency has met all its performance targets since it was launched in April 1995.

The Chief Executive of the MHS is responsible to the Minister for the Agency's performance and operations. He is accountable for securing efficiency and economical conduct of the Agency's business. The Agency works in line with government tendering rules to optimise value for money. For example the MHS makes extensive use of contract Official Veterinary Surgeons (OVSs) which it obtains by means of national competitive tendering procedures. These are in line with Government purchasing policy and ensure that the best value for money is obtained for plant operators.

My ministerial colleagues and I monitor closely the financial performance of the Agency. Indeed, MHS charges for each financial year are subject to ministerial agreement before being implemented. We are satisfied that the MHS is meeting its objective of delivering value for money in the provision of efficient and high quality services.

Food Standards and Safety Group

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current structure of the Joint Food Standards and Safety Group. [64959]

Mr. Rooker: The Joint Food Safety and Standards Group works across Departmental boundaries, bringing together those parts of MAFF and the Department of Health that have responsibility for food safety and standards matters. The Group currently comprises around 380 officials who report to both Agriculture and Health Ministers. It is organised into 11 divisions, including two that are responsible for developing and implementing plans for the Food Standards Agency. The divisions deal with the following main areas of policy: additives and novel foods; food labelling, food authenticity and compositional standards; food contaminants; animal feedingstuffs and fertilisers; food hygiene; meat hygiene; veterinary advice on public health matters; radiological safety; nutrition and diet; and enforcement issues. I shall shortly place in the Library of the House an organogram that illustrates these arrangements.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many reports the Joint Food Safety and Standards Group has so far made to Ministers; and when the next report is expected. [64958]

Mr. Rooker: The Joint Food Safety and Standards Group brings together the officials in those parts of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Department of Health that are responsible for food safety and standards matters. It is a set unit of civil servants rather than a body that reports periodically. Since the Group was established on 1 September 1997 it has provided ongoing policy and executive support to Agriculture and Health Ministers.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what dates the Joint Food Safety and Standards Group has met since it was established; and on what dates this group is scheduled to meet in 1999. [65050]

Mr. Rooker: The Joint Food Safety and Standards Group brings together the officials in those parts of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Department of Health that are responsible for food safety and standards matters. It is a set unit of civil servants rather than a body that meets periodically. Since it was established on 1 September 1997 the Group has provided ongoing policy and executive support to Ministers in both Departments. It will continue to do so until the Food Standards Agency, of which it is expected to form the operational core, is established.

Milk

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his Department has made of (a) the potential side effects on consumers of milk and (b) the effect on milk output and price, of the use of bovine somatotrophin. [65658]

Mr. Rooker: Bovine somatotrophin (BST) is a hormone produced naturally by all cows and is present in small quantities in all cows milk. Applications for authorisation of the product have been very carefully assessed by various expert committees in the UK and Europe and all agree that the applications meet the statutory criteria of safety, quality and efficacy. Safety includes the safety of the consumer. Its use in the EU is subject to a moratorium. If permitted, it would be subject to veterinary control.

The European Commission has reported that the productivity increase from the use of BST is estimated to be in the range of 5 per cent. to 20 per cent. However, since EU milk production is constrained by quotas, it is unlikely that there would be any significant impact on either output or price.

Natural Predators

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect of natural predators on the levels of damage to agriculture caused by (a) rabbits, (b) voles, (c) rats and (d) mice; and if he will list the predators concerned in each case. [65097]

Mr. Morley: No assessment has been made of the effect of natural predators on the levels of damage caused to agriculture by pests. Rabbits and rodents cause considerable economic loss and any level of natural predation is likely to be beneficial.

Regional Flood Defence Committees

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the grants awarded by his Department to the South West Regional Flood Defence Committee in each year from 1993–94 to 1998–99 by (a) amount and (b) percentage change over the previous year. [65096]

Mr. Morley: Grant is awarded to the Environment Agency by means of Grant Earning Ceilings (GECs) which represent the total of approved flood defence capital expenditure in respect of which grant can be claimed. GECs reflect commitments on ongoing schemes and a national assessment of the priority and urgency of new schemes. Therefore year on year comparisons should be treated with caution. It is also the case that the Environment Agency's South West Regional Flood Defence Committee (RFDC) has not taken up the original award fully in all years.

I list below (i) the GECs originally awarded each year to the South West RFDC, (ii) the percentage change compared to the previous year's original GEC and (iii) the final outturn for each year.

Year	Original GEC (£ million)	Percentage change	Final outturn (£ million)
1993–94	5.8	+4	3.9
1994–95	5.6	−3	3.2

1996–97	4.5	−10	5.1
1997–98	3.0	−33	2.9
1998–99	2.2	−27	[1]—

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much he plans to award each of the regional flood defence committees in 1999–2000. [65095]

Mr. Morley: I have announced the award of 1999–2000 Grant Earning Ceilings (GECs) to the Environment Agency's Regional and Local Flood Defence Committees as follows for their core capital programmes. In addition further funding for flood warning improvements is being provided to the Agency on a national basis.

Environment Agency (Flood Defence Work)

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what legislative authority the Environment Agency has to market-test or contract-out its flood defence emergency and routine maintenance functions. [65094]

Mr. Morley: Under Section 37(1)(a) of the Environment Act 1995, the Environment Agency may do anything which, in its opinion, is calculated to facilitate, or is conducive or incidental to, carrying out its functions. This would include the market testing or contracting out of its flood defence emergency and routine maintenance functions.

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what instructions (a) the Minister and (b) the Environment Agency has issued on the question of market testing or contracting out aspects of its flood defence work. [65093]

Mr. Morley: The Government have not issued specific instructions to the Environment Agency about the market testing of its flood defence work. Rather, the Agency is consistently encouraged to continue to deliver improvements in efficiency, and market testing and contracting out feature among the measures that the Agency may wish to use to achieve its efficiency objectives.

The Agency's Financial Memorandum generally requires that all contracts for whatever function are designed to secure value for money and should be let on a competitive basis unless the Agency is satisfied there are good reasons to the contrary.

Also, for flood defence capital works to be eligible for MAFF grant, the Agency is generally required to tender on a competitive basis as set out in the MAFF Grant Memorandum.

The Agency has issued internal instructions to implement the requirements of the Financial Memorandum and the MAFF Grant Memorandum.

Pesticides

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to discuss with his counterparts in other European Union member states the establishment of a pesticide policy across the Community. [65415]

Mr. Rooker: My right hon. Friend the Minister takes the lead as respects agricultural pesticides; the lead on other pesticides (and biocides) lies with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

Directive 91/414/EEC already provides a common basis for the regulation of agricultural pesticides across the Community. Until it is fully operative, the Directive permits the various national arrangements to continue. This transition, from national to harmonised regulation, has proved more lengthy than originally envisaged but the great majority of rules are in place for chemical pesticides and significant progress has been made regarding those for biological pesticides.

The European Commission has finally recognised that progress needs to be more rapid and last October produced a working paper proposing ways of achieving this. UK Ministers and officials will play a full part in discussions of the Commission's proposals and will seek to advance practical measures to make the Directive fully effective. However, we shall continue to maintain our first priority—the protection of people and the environment.

Lindane

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the expected timetable for the UK regulatory authorities to consider the report being produced by the European Commission on the environmental and health effects of the insecticide Lindane; and if the report will be published. [66015]

Mr. Rooker: The Austrian authorities submitted an initial evaluation of Lindane to the European Commission last month, as part of the EU's routine review programme for plant protection products. The process of peer review and decision-making by the Community is likely to take until the first half of the year 2000 but could be expedited if issues of human or environmental safety arise. The first phase, scientific peer review, is scheduled to run between March and October. The UK regulatory authorities will participate in this work and will therefore be considering the Austrian report ahead of the meetings.

If action is called for by the Austrian evaluation, the Government will not hesitate to take steps or to press the Commission to do so. After a decision has been taken by the Commission, the report from the decision making process will be made publicly available.

Vitamin B

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidance he has given to the departmental Ad Hoc Export Advisory Committee on Vitamins and Mineral Supplements in the light of research commissioned by his Department on vitamin B. [65757]

Mr. Rooker: The Expert Group on Vitamins and Minerals will consider all relevant scientific information on the safety of vitamins and minerals, including any which may be available from research commissioned by this Department.

Dietary Supplements

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the criteria he will operate to allow unrestricted sale of dietary supplements. [65758]

Mr. Rooker: Dietary supplements which are classed as foods are subject to the requirements of the food law. Provided that they comply with those requirements they may be freely sold.

Grain Stores

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the amounts of pesticides used in grain stores in the UK. [66014]

Mr. Rooker: The Ministry has collected pesticides usage data covering the agricultural and horticultural sectors since the 1960s and reports analysing all these data have been published. Information on grain stores is gathered every four years; the next survey will be this year for storage in 1998–99 of the 1998 harvest.

Comparison in usage data between the last surveys in 1994–95 and previous ones is difficult because of changes in grain store practice, survey methodologies and quantities of grain surveyed. However indications are that use in commercial stores has gone down substantially—the weight of pesticide per tonne of grain was only a third of the 1985–86 level—while use in farm stores appears to have increased—the weight of pesticide per tonne of grain was up by about a fifth on 1990–91 figures. The changes result from stricter hygiene requirements of grain buyers and improved administrative arrangements avoiding unnecessary treatments. There has been a move away from the practice of admixing pesticides with the grain towards treating the store's walls and floors to ensure no pests are left between emptying and re-filling.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has funded into the engineering design of grain stores to enable grain to be safely stored without the use of added chemicals. [66012]

Mr. Rooker: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (MAFF) has a strategic research programme on grain storage which includes a project on the development of modified atmosphere application systems for use within grain stores, as an alternative to control by pesticides. The MAFF work underpins more applied research funded by the levy body, the Home Grown Cereals Authority (HGCA).

Sand Dunes

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the letter of 30 September 1998 from the Minister, my hon. Friend the Member for Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley), for fisheries and the countryside to the hon. Member for Linlithgow concerning habitats, if he will make a statement on the action planned for sand dunes. [65384]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 14 January 1999]: Under the UK Biodiversity Action Plan, a costed Habitat Action Plan for coastal sand dunes is being prepared and is due to be published later this year. It will include specific targets for the protection and enhancement of sand dunes and a list of actions to help achieve these targets.

A large proportion of sand dunes is designated as SSSIs and twenty-one sites have been proposed to the European Commission as candidate Special Areas of Conservation under the Habitats Directive.

The Countryside Stewardship Scheme includes various measures to encourage farmers and land managers to improve the natural beauty and diversity of the countryside. These include payments for managing sand dunes. The Scheme is voluntary and competitive, and agreements under it run for 10 years. Similar measures apply in Scotland under the Countryside Premium Scheme.

School Milk

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the agricultural industry on the re-introduction of free milk in schools. [66069]

Mr. Morley: The main representations for free school milk have come from a parents pressure group called Milk For Schools. Farming and industry organisations have, however, called for various improvements in the present arrangements.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will assess the benefits of reintroducing free milk in schools. [66068]

Mr. Morley: Milk can play an important part in a balanced diet but it is only one of many such foods. For this reason, and due to financial constraints, the Government have no plans to assess the benefits of reintroducing free milk in schools.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has held with Professor Bourne since the publication of the latest statistics on TB breakdowns. [66081]

Mr. Rooker: The latest TB breakdown statistics to be published are those which I sent the hon. Member on 29 July 1998. Since then my right hon. Friend the Minister and I have met Professor Bourne together on one occasion, and separately on one occasion each.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by county the numbers of herd breakdowns to tuberculosis in each quarter of each of the last three years. [66082]

Mr. Rooker: Figures for the numbers of new confirmed herd breakdowns by county are not available on a quarterly basis. The data are not recorded in a manner which would permit quarterly figures to be constructed. Annual figures are retained on a county basis from 1997 and I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 2 July 1998, Official Report, column 318, and my subsequent letter of 29 July 1998, which also listed provisional figures for the first six months of 1998.

Warfarin

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to (a) restrict and (b) prevent the use of warfarin for pest control. [66083]

Mr. Rooker: Warfarin is presently permitted in the UK for specified pest control uses under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986. However, it also falls within the scope of the emerging EU regulatory regimes for plant protection products and biocidal products.

The plant protection uses of warfarin are being reviewed by the EU Commission as part of a programme that will eventually cover all compounds used in such products. The rules for the review programme put the onus on companies, wishing to continue to market such products, to provide data to address possible risks to people and the environment. Despite several opportunities, we understand that no company has yet provided and adequate data package for warfarin. The Commission are therefore likely to propose the restriction or removal of plant protection uses of warfarin and the Government would be minded to support such a step. We are, however, aware of the implications for the forestry sector; the Forestry Commission is encouraging manufacturers to provide data and is urgently researching alternative control methods.

This would not have any direct implication for the use of warfarin to protect public health as opposed to crops. The Biocidal Products Directive applies to public health products and, although these will be reviewed in due course, that review is not yet under way.

Written Answers to Questions

DEFENCE

101 Battalion REME (Chorley)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will name the officers and staff in Land Command who recommended the transfer of HQ 101 Battalion REME from Chorley to Queensferry. [65025]

Mr. Doug Henderson: It is not our practice to identify individual officials in this way under Exemption 2 (Internal discussion and advice) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many officer vacancies exist in 101 Battalion REME in Chorley; and if he will estimate the number of officer posts in 101 Battalion REME that are likely to become vacant during 1999. [65022]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There are currently no officer vacancies at 101 Battalion REME in Chorley. It is not possible to gauge the number of officer posts in 101 Battalion REME that may become vacant in 1999, but we expect to have no difficulty achieving full staffing.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will refer back to Commander in Chief Land Command the decision to transfer HQ 101 Battalion REME from Chorley to Queensferry. [65020]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I am satisfied that the advice that Land Command provided Ministers to inform their decision on the transfer of Headquarters 101 Battalion REME from Chorley to Queensferry was sound.

RAF (Support Personnel)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many technical support personnel are required to support the deployment away from existing RAF bases of flights of four or eight Tornado aircraft; and how many will be required for similar flights of Eurofighter aircraft. [65754]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The number of technical support personnel deployed to support four or eight Tornado aircraft is dependent on several factors, including the operational requirement, the flying task, the number of hours to be worked in any one day and the amount of support available from the Host Nation. However, a flight of four or eight aircraft would be likely to generate a minimum of 82 and 144 technical support personnel respectively. An exact assessment of the numbers of technical support personnel required for Eurofighter has yet to be carried out, but preliminary studies indicate that approximately the same number of personnel will be required.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many technical support personnel are required to support the deployment away from existing RAF bases of flights of four or eight Jaguar aircraft. [66177]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The number of technical support personnel deployed to support four or eight Jaguar aircraft is dependent on several factors, including the operational requirement, the flying task, the number of hours to be worked in any one day and the amount of support available from the Host Nation. However, a flight of four or eight aircraft would be likely to generate a minimum of 65 and 110 technical support personnel respectively.

Aircraft

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the forecast service life of (a) Eurofighter and (b) Jaguar aircraft engines. [65732]

Mr. Spellar: The forecast service life of the Eurofighter engine will be aligned to the predicted life of the whole aircraft, which is 25 years or 6,000 flying hours.

The Jaguar aircraft entered RAF service in 1973. On current plans, the Jaguar fleet, including the engines, will leave service in the later part of the next decade.

Modern aircraft engines are of modular design. Each module has an approved life and may be replaced during the life of the whole engine in accordance with established maintenance policy.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the forecast service life of (a) Harrier GR7 and (b) Jaguar aircraft airframes. [65731]

Mr. Spellar: The Harrier GR7 aircraft entered RAF service in 1987. On current plans, the Harrier GR7 fleet will achieve a service life of some 30 years.

The Jaguar aircraft entered RAF service in 1973. On current plans, the Jaguar fleet will leave service in the later part of the next decade.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what service life has been achieved to date and what is forecast for Canberra aircraft in service with the RAF. [65733]

Mr. Spellar: The RAF Canberra fleet comprises two marks of the aircraft, the T4 and the PR9. The T4s entered service between 1954 and 1955 and have served some 44 years. The PR9s entered service between 1959 and 1960 and have served some 39 years. On current plans, the Canberra fleet will leave service in the early part of the next decade.

Ships

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the interval between major refits for HMS Ark Royal. [65730]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The first refit of HMS Ark Royal has not yet taken place.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the forecast service life of each of the three aircraft carriers in service with the Royal Navy; and what will be the (a) design life and (b) design interval between major refits of the proposed replacement carriers. [65910]

Mr. Spellar: The forecast service life for HMS Invincible, HMS Illustrious and HMS Ark Royal is approximately 30 years. We plan to replace these carriers from around 2012 with two new, larger vessels. The planned service life of the new ships is a minimum of 30 years. The new carriers will not undergo lengthy major refits in the traditional sense, but will instead undergo shorter, but more frequent periods of maintenance lasting about six months every five or six years.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average time between major refits for (a) Type 22 and (b) Type 23 ships. [65753]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Typically, the average time between major refits for RN Frigates and Destroyers is in excess of 7 years.

Surveillance Towers (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the intended strategic purpose of the surveillance towers on hilltop sites in the South Armagh area; and what factors would be taken into account in a review of these towers. [65998]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The primary function of the towers on hilltop sites is to protect Security Force bases in the South Armagh area and patrols conducted from them. As with all military establishments in Northern Ireland, the requirement for the towers is kept under continuous review to ensure the level of support provided to the RUC is consistent with the prevailing security situation and the assessment of the threat posed by terrorist organisations.

PRIME MINISTER

Special Advisers

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will list the assumed or equivalent civil service grades of each of the special advisers employed in his Office; [65915]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 15 December 1998, Official Report, columns 458–59, on special advisers, if he will list the assumed or equivalent civil service grade of each of the listed special advisers. [65916]

The Prime Minister: Special Advisers are employed under terms and conditions set out in the Model Contract for Special Advisers. Special Advisers stand outside the departmental hierarchy and do not equate to particular civil service grades.

Former Ministers

Mr. Brady: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he made of the extent to which there was a conflict of interest in the former Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson), having a loan from the hon. Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson) at a time when the right hon. Gentleman's Department was investigating the business affairs of the hon. Member. [66456]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 18 January 1999]: Since the former Secretary of State was not involved in the Department of Trade and Industry's inquiries into certain allegations relating to companies with which my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson) had been involved, I am satisfied that no conflict of interest existed.

Defence Restructuring

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Prime Minister what is the current composition of the Ministerial Group on the Restructuring of the European Aerospace and Defence Industry (MISC 5). [66847]

The Prime Minister: As the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry may have to take decisions under the competition legislation on the proposed merger which BAe and GEC have announced in principle, I have decided that, while these issues are under consideration, it would be preferable for the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry not to participate in the work of MISC 5 in order to avoid any risk of it appearing that he had prejudged the issues involved. I have therefore appointed the Secretary of State for Defence as the Chairman of the Ministerial Group. The DTI will continue to be represented by the Minister for Energy and Industry.

Devolution

Mr. Curry: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the draft concordats drawn up to govern relations between the Government and the Executives of (a) the Scottish Parliament and (b) the National Assembly for Wales. [66189]

The Prime Minister: Work is progressing on concordats both within the Scottish and Welsh Offices and in Whitehall Departments, as it is of course in Northern Ireland as well. None of them have yet been published.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what consultations he had with (a) leaders of the British Muslim community and (b) British Muslim academics before endorsing the bombing of Iraq. [65393]

The Prime Minister: The Government make every effort to ensure that they are aware of the views of the British Muslim community and that their policies are understood by that community. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary met members of the Muslim press before and after Operation Desert Fox, and gave an address to the Muslim Council of Britain. The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my right hon. Friend for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) also holds regular meetings with representatives of the Muslim community at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 12 January 1999, Official Report, column 143, concerning military action against Iraq, by whom the reasons are well understood. [66493]

The Prime Minister: I was referring to our European Union partners in my answer of 12 January. They know why we took military action against Iraq because we have briefed them fully on our reasons for doing so.

Fish Conservation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 16 December 1998, Official Report, column 962, what steps he plans to take to reduce the discarding of edible fish under the quota system. [66114]

The Prime Minister: Government policies which will reduce discarding of edible fish include reducing fishing effort, improving the selectivity of fishing gear and introducing fixed quota allocations.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 16 December 1998, Official Report, column 962, what steps he plans to take with other European countries to reform the Common Fisheries Policy; and if he will make a statement. [66113]

The Prime Minister: The Government will continue to work with other Member States and the European Commission to achieve more effective and consistent enforcement of fisheries rules across the Community; integrate environmental considerations more fully into the Common Fisheries Policy to make it a more effective instrument for conserving fish stocks and the wider marine environment; apply structural and conservation measures in a way that achieves a sustainable future for the fishing industry; and improve the regional dimension of the CFP so that it is more sensitive to local differences.

TREASURY

Financial Services

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what responses he has received to the draft Financial Services and Markets Bill; and if he will make a statement. [66812]

Ms Hewitt: The response to publication of the draft Bill in July 1998 showed strong support for the creation of a single statutory regulator. There is widespread interest in ensuring that the Financial Services Authority continues to operate a fair, open and accountable manner. The Government intend to clarify and, where necessary, to amend the Bill to meet valid concerns raised on consultation and in response to the current inquiry by the Treasury Committee and the intended pre-legislative scrutiny by a Joint Committee of both Houses.

In the meantime, we have decided to strengthen further the openness and accountability of the new regulatory regime. We intend to include in the Bill a statutory requirement for the FSA to establish practitioner and consumer panels, underpinning the arrangements the FSA has already put in place. We also intend to include in the Bill a requirement for the FSA to hold an annual open meeting at which the Chairman and others can be questioned on the FSA's policy and performance. The Bill will also include a requirement that the non-executive members should form a majority on the FSA Board.

The statutory requirements in the draft Bill for the FSA to consult on rules will be improved and will include a requirement that proposed rules and rule changes be accompanied by an explanation of how they relate to the FSA's objectives. The consultation requirements will also be extended so as to apply to standing guidance of general application.

The draft Bill requires the FSA to have in place arrangements for independent investigation of complaints. The FSA will be required under the Bill to consult on these arrangements. We also intend that in addition to publishing the conclusions of his investigation the investigator should be able to report on the FSA's response to any recommendations made.

The FSA will be accountable to Ministers and through them to Parliament. Its annual report under the Bill will be a key aspect of that accountability. The draft Bill enables the Treasury to require the FSA to report on specific matters. We will begin discussions with the FSA with a view to publishing an agreed list of matters to be covered in the report. We also intend that the Treasury should be given new powers to commission and publish periodic independent value for money audits of the FSA.

The draft Bill provides the Treasury with a number of powers to make statutory instruments. Drafts of key orders will be published for public consultation shortly. We will also undertake appropriate consultation on the other orders.

Former Ministers

Mr. Brady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) when he was first informed of the loan by the previous Paymaster General to the previous Secretary of State for Trade and Industry; [66457]

(2) if he will list the Ministers and officials in his Department with whom he discussed the loan by the previous Paymaster General to the previous Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and the dates on which he had such discussions; [66461]

(3) what discussions he had about the loan by the previous Paymaster General to the previous Secretary of State for Trade and Industry with the Prime Minister; and on what date he first had such discussions; [66459]

(4) what discussions he had about the loan by the previous Paymaster General to the previous Secretary of State for Trade and Industry with his adviser, Mr. Charlie Whelan; and on what date he first had such discussions. [66458]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 18 January 1999]: This was and is a matter involving the former Paymaster General and the former Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. It is not a matter for Treasury Ministers.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what matters or correspondence involving building societies were dealt with by the previous Paymaster General between 1 May 1997 and the date of his resignation. [66445]

Mr. Gordon Brown: The previous Paymaster General had no ministerial responsibility for building societies.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what contact he has had with the Inland Revenue regarding the taxation position of the hon. Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson), the hon. Member's business interests and those offshore trusts connected with the hon. Member. [66446]

Dawn Primarolo: Treasury Ministers have no ministerial responsibility for or involvement in the tax affairs of individuals.

Financial Support

Mr. Brady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to disclose what financial support he has received since 1 May 1997 for the development of his economic policies and the sources of that financial support. [66448]

Mr. Gordon Brown: My policy is to act in accordance with the Ministerial Code and with the House of Commons rules for registration of interests.

WALES

National Assembly

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the appointments of officials to the National Assembly made to date; and if he will estimate, in each case, their annual cost. [64503]

Mr. Michael: In preparation for the National Assembly for Wales, the following appointments have been made to the Office of the Presiding Officer and the Executive Secretariat of the Assembly.

	Pay band (£)
Counsel General	77,840–113,680
Office of the Presiding Officer
Senior Director, Assembly Business	71,250–107,300
Director, Assembly Business (and project manager for the establishment of the Office of the Presiding Officer)	54,230–90,400
Assistant Director, Public and Research Services	40,420–63,490
Chief Translator	27,043–41,935
Deputy Head Translation Services (Interpretation)	20,723–31,978
Executive Secretariat
Head of Executive Secretariat	40,420–63,490
Implementation Unit
2 x Pay Band F (G7)	27,043–41,935
2 x Pay Band D (HEO)	15,990–24,464
3 x Pay Band C (EO)	12,240–18,360
2 x Pay Band B (AO and PS)	9,536–13,700

The full year costs of the Implementation Unit would be £215,400 based on the 1998–99 projected average grade costs. The unit has a limited life span and will exist for 6 months.

A number of further appointments, for example for translators and for general administrative staff, are currently in train.

All of these costs are included in the estimated additional running costs.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what his estimate is of (a) the number of people who will be employed by the National Assembly and (b) the total cost of their employment to public funds. [64529]

Mr. Michael: The bulk of the existing staff of the Welsh Office will transfer to work for the Assembly but the Assembly will require more staff than those currently employed in the Welsh Office; the Explanatory & Financial Memorandum to the Government of Wales Bill estimated the number at about 100. The annual additional running costs of the Assembly have been estimated as £15 million to £20 million more than the costs of running the Welsh Office, which are currently some £70 million. These additional costs include the pay and allowances of Assembly members and the accommodation and information technology requirements of members and staff as well as the additional staff costs.

Crickhowell House

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the arrangement originally entered into by the Welsh Office for the lease of Crickhowell House, Cardiff, were in line with Treasury rules for the leasing of such property; what study was undertaken of comparable buildings in the area; and what rents were sought for leases of such alternative options. [65282]

Mr. Michael: A copy of the option appraisal prepared by Welsh Health Common Services Authority (WHCSA) in respect of moving to new accommodation on a single site was submitted by the Department to Treasury for approval on 17 May 1991. Treasury advised that there were no objections to the proposed option provided that the Department's Accounting Officer was satisfied that taking into account all elements of the appraisal, financial and non-financial, the option represented the best value for money.

Eight developers with 11 sites were approached in January 1991 and seven of these made outline proposals. Refinements of the brief and the proposals led to a short list of three by June 1991. Of the three proposals, one was eliminated for financial reasons, and 2 were broadly similar. Having taken independent legal and property advice and having considered rents and other financial aspects, WHCSA's Board recommended the Grovesnor Waterside bid for providing leased accommodation at Crickhowell House.

I have asked the Chief Executive of WHCSA to send the right hon. Member a copy of the post project evaluation report prepared by the Authority.

European Structural Funds

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the members of the European Objective I Task Force and the organisation or councils they represent. [65413]

Mr. Hain: The Wales European Task Force, which was set up to look at the use of Structural Funds across all of Wales, consists of the major social and economic partner organisations with an interest in economic development. Except where indicated membership is for organisations, not individuals. The membership is as below:

WDA

WLGA

Council of Welsh TECs

Heads of Higher Education institutions in Wales

Fforwm

Welsh Council for Voluntary Action

TUC

CBI

Federation of Small Businesses

Equal Opportunities Commission

Wales Tourist Board
National Farmers' Union
Farmers Union of Wales
Countryside Council for Wales
Mr. Hywel Ceri Jones
Wayne David MEP (representing all Welsh MEPs)
The Four Regional Economic Fora
The Environment Agency.

This membership may be varied as the work of this task force moves forward.

Ministerial Flights

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the use of private jets by ministers in his Department since 2 May 1997. [65673]

Mr. Michael: As part of visits to British Aerospace the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Neath (Mr. Hain), joined the company's regular shuttle services between Filton, Hawarden and Toulouse. These flights were at no cost to the Department and were not in place of scheduled flights. Private jets have not been used by Welsh Office Ministers on any other occasion since 2 May 1997.

Long-stay Care Hospitals

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he proposes in his policies for long-stay care hospitals. [66034]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Many long stay units are small, modern or updated facilities which have a clear, locally agreed, role and these will continue. The remaining large mental and learning disability hospitals will be closed as and when resources allow but only when there are facilities in place to deliver a safe and effective service.

Nurses

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on nurses' pay. [66030]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Review body for Nursing Staff, Midwives and Health Visitors which considers nurses pay has recently submitted its report to the Prime Minister. A decision on its recommendations is likely to be announced shortly.

NHS (Resources)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new money is scheduled for the NHS in the forthcoming financial year; and if he will make a statement. [66032]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Comprehensive Spending Review provided an additional £175 million to NHS Wales in 1999–2000 bringing total provision to £2,654.9 million. This represented a 7.1 per cent. increase on 1998–99 provision.

Pensioners (Free Transport)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated annual cost of the proposal to allow unlimited free public transport in Wales to people of pensionable age; from what sources those costs would be met; and if he will make a statement. [65907]

Mr. Hain: I am consulting local authorities and bus operators on how best to move to free concessionary bus travel for pensioners, which I expect to see phased in over the next two to three years. Until this work has been completed it is not possible to put a precise figure on the cost of the proposal. The method of funding the additional costs will be a matter for the National Assembly to determine.

Housing (Flintshire)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) starts and (b) completions of Housing Association homes there have been in Flintshire in each of the past three years; and if he will make a statement. [66418]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Starts and completions achieved by Housing Associations in the last three financial years are as follows:

	1997–98	1996–97	1995–96
Starts
Flintshire	145	118	207
Wales	2,468	3,200	3,688
Completions
Flintshire	90	213	250
Wales	2,989	3,717	3,799

Over this period Flintshire has received approximately 5 per cent. of the Housing Association programme in Wales. Resources have been made available to Housing Associations in Flintshire to achieve a similar outcome in financial year 1998–99.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in what ways he plans to assist Flintshire County Council to repair and modernise its housing stock; and if he will make a statement. [66416]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Flintshire County Council's Basic Credit approval (BCA) for 1999–2000 is £8.833 million. It is for the Council to decide on the capital expenditure that it wishes to support from its BCA, including housing. In addition to the BCA supplementary Credit Approvals (SCAs) of £100 million are also available to local authorities in Wales to support strategic housing projects. All local authorities have been invited to submit proposals by the end of January for the use of those SCAs.

Job Opportunities

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to increase the diversity of job opportunities outside the M4 and A55 corridors. [66398]

Mr. Hain: Increasing job opportunities and spreading economic prosperity to all parts of Wales is a key objective for the Government. It is being pursued through the Strategic Guidance to the WDA and will be fundamental to the aims of the National Development Strategy covering EC Structural Funds, currently being prepared by the European Task Force.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Motor Neurone Disease

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will respond to the Motor Neurone Disease Association's report on the effect of the Benefit Integrity Project on people with Motor Neurone Disease. [65591]

Mr. Bayley: I responded to the Motor Neurone Disease (MND) Association on 19 January 1999.

The Benefit Integrity Project (BIP) has been subject to continuous review and prior to the Association's report being published in November 1998, significant improvements had been made to the way in which the BIP operated. Since 5 October, people with MND who are receiving the higher rate of mobility component together with the highest rate of the care component of Disability Living Allowance were exempt from the operation of the Project.

We plan that BIP should be replaced by a new system of review which is part of the routine administration of the benefit and which is both sensitive and fair. We are currently discussing our proposals with the Disability Benefits Forum.

Benefit Integrity Project

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Maidenhead (Mrs. May) of 1 December 1998, Official Report, columns 145–47, on the Benefit Integrity Project, what estimates his Department made of the level of successful reviews and appeals following decisions made by the Benefit Integrity Project, when calculating estimated benefit savings; and what plans his Department has to revise the current estimate for benefit savings to reflect the latest statistics on appeals against decisions made under the Benefit Integrity Project. [66413]

Mr. Bayley: The most recent estimate of benefit savings from the Benefit Integrity Project is £8 million for 1997–98, £30 million for 1998–99 and £35 million for 1999–2000. A further estimate of the savings attributable to this Project will be calculated when it ceases.

Notes:

1. The estimate is based on information on reviews and appeals to the middle of 1998. This showed awards were increased in 32 per cent. of review decisions and 73 per cent. of appeal decisions. Cases processed as part of the Benefit Integrity Project after this date were assumed to follow a similar pattern in terms of review and appeal decisions.

2. This estimate was made on the assumption that the Project would continue to March 2000.

Disability Benefits

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if recipients of Severe Disablement Allowance will be compelled to attend work-focused job interviews through the Single Gateway to Work. [66245]

Angela Eagle: Through the Single Work-Focused Gateway we want to offer help to the widest range of people possible—no one should be denied the offer of help and assistance.

Attendance at a Personal Adviser interview will be a condition of receiving benefits for claimants of working age who are out of work including those claiming Severe Disablement Allowance. However, this requirement may be waived or deferred in appropriate cases.

Ms Blears: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the responses to the consultation document on disability benefits. [66708]

Mr. Bayley: Consultation on our proposals for the reform of benefits for disabled people ended on 8 January and 342 responses have been received. Just over half came from organisations representing disabled people, at both national and local level, from local authorities, and from the insurance industry. Most of the remaining responses came from individuals. Nearly 50 hon. Members submitted responses, many from their constituents. The All Party Disablement Group also submitted a response. We thank hon. Members and all those who took the time and trouble to respond to the consultation document and can assure them that we are studying the responses carefully.

A list of the organisations who responded has been placed in the Library. Copies of the list and copies of specific responses are available, excluding those that requested confidentiality, on request from the Disability Benefits Consultation Team, Department of Social Security, 6th Floor, The Adelphi, 1–11 John Adam Street, London WC2N 6HT.

Commercial Lobbyists

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what rules or guidance his Department has to govern the (a) formal and (b) informal interaction between his civil servants and commercial lobbyists. [66217]

Mr. Timms: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer from my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister to my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 27 July 1998, Official Report, column 4.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Disabled People (Employment Services)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the services that will be available to a disabled person attending an interview through the Single Work-focused Gateway announced on 13 January; and how these differ from those under the Single Gateway to Work announced in "A New Contract for Welfare: The Gateway to Work" (Cm 4102). [66200]

Mr. Andrew Smith: For clients of working age accessing the benefit system, including people with disabilities, the work focused interview with a personal adviser will consist of an in-depth investigation of individual needs and an exploration of ways to overcome any barriers that prevent participation in the labour market. The adviser will access information on a wide range of options available locally, and provide a personalised calculation of potential in-work income. The aim will be to draw up and agree a tailor-made plan of steps which the individual can take.

The personal adviser will help people gain access to relevant services. Thus, for disabled people, it may be appropriate to seek the advice and support of a disability employment specialist or to get some kind of mentoring support.

The announcement on 13 January was that £79 million has been made available from the Invest to Save budget to finance the piloting of the Single Work Focused Gateway described in "A New Contract for Welfare: The Gateway to Work" (Cm 4102), which are thus one and the same.

New Deal (Hart)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people have entered the New Deal Gateway in the Hart district council area since its inception; and how many took up each New Deal option. [65296]

Mr. Andrew Smith: It is not possible to provide separate figures for individual towns or council areas.

The latest Government Statistical Service figures for the Guildford Unit of Delivery, which covers Hart, show that to the end of October 1998 (a) 461 young people had entered the Gateway and 126 have secured unsubsidised employment; (b) 69 had joined one of the four options: 14 on the Employment option; 9 on the Voluntary Sector option; 3 on the Environment Task Force; and 43 on the Full-Time Education and Training option. 150 young people were on the Gateway, 22 had left New Deal to claim other benefits, 19 had gone to other known destinations and 75 had gone to unknown destinations.

Jobcentres (Disabled Access)

Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many job centres are fully accessible for the disabled; and what percentage have the equipment and trained staff to offer a gateway interview to disabled people. [65086]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Geraint Davies, dated 19 January 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply direct to your question regarding the number of Jobcentres that are fully accessible for the disabled; and what percentage have the equipment and trained staff to offer a gateway interview to disabled people. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

It may be helpful if I explain that for the last three years the Employment Service has carried out an annual audit of progress on its planned programme of works to improve the accessibility of Jobcentres to people with disabilities. This is to ensure that we comply with the requirements of the Disability Discrimination Act within the timescales set. The audit indicates whether our buildings have wheelchair access, loop hearing aid facilities and disabled toilets.

The latest audit results showed that from a total of 1180 premises, 93% have wheelchair access for clients. The remaining offices offer alternative arrangements to clients with special needs—either arranging interviews at a nearby office with disabled access or by visiting the clients in their homes.

In addition, 64% of Jobcentres have toilet facilities for disabled people and 72% have loop hearing facilities. We expect these proportions to increase to 66 and 90% respectively by April 1999 as part of our planned improvement programme.

With regard to the percentage of offices which have staff trained to offer New Deal gateway interviews to disabled people, I can confirm that we are normally able to provide such a service in all of our offices.

I hope this is helpful.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Children (Parental Contact)

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department for what reasons the courts and other authorities are not able to take action when one parent takes unilateral action in preventing the other parent from having contact with their child. [65880]

Mr. Hoon: Contact arrangements normally work best when both parents are willing to co-operate, and in approaching the enforcement of contact orders the courts will seek to secure this. But the courts can, and will, enforce orders granting a parent contact with a child, including imprisonment as a last resort. Courts take their decisions in the best interests of the child and in the light of all the evidence and the particular circumstances of each case.

Decennial Census Records

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what powers he has to reduce the closure period of official decennial census records; what representations he has received requesting the reduction of the closure period of official decennial census records; and if he will instruct the Public Record Office to reduce the closure period of official decennial census records to 75 years. [65913]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor has powers under section 5(1) of the Public Records Act 1958 to reduce the closure period of official records with the approval, or at the request, of the Minister primarily concerned.

The Lord Chancellor has received a number of representations from family historians requesting a reduction in the closure period of official decennial census records.

The Lord Chancellor does not intend to change the existing closure period, which corresponds to the guidelines established in the White Paper Open Government of 1993 (Cm 2290). This assigned a 100-year closure period for decennial census returns on the grounds that they consisted of documents supplied in confidence the disclosure of which would constitute a breach of good faith.

The intention of the Minister primarily concerned with the decennial census returns, the Economic Secretary to the Treasury, was expressed in a written answer to Lord Teviot on 14 October 1997, Official Report, House of Lords, columns 138–39.

CABINET OFFICE

Civil Servants (Hearing Impairment)

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what estimate his Department has made of the total cost of introducing retrospective changes to the superannuation scheme for civil servants so as to ensure that former and current civil servants are granted pension entitlements for the years they were designated as having permanent unestablished status solely on the basis of a hearing impairment. [65268]

Mr. Kilfoyle: No estimate has been made of these costs (or of extending any concession to the large numbers of civil servants who in other circumstances did not qualify for a pension). I am afraid that I can hold out no hope of any relevant improvement in the statutory provisions. In superannuation matters, it is rarely, if ever, possible to make changes with retrospective effect.

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what estimate his Department has made of the total number of civil servants who have not yet reached retirement age who have at some point in their career been given permanent unestablished status solely on the grounds of a hearing impediment. [65267]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The distinction between established and unestablished service disappeared in 1972 when a new pension scheme was introduced. Staff serving in an unestablished capacity, including those on permanent unestablished terms, were admitted to the scheme. Their earlier unestablished service then became pensionable. There are no centrally held records of the numbers of staff serving in a permanent unestablished capacity who resigned before this change was made and who subsequently returned to the Civil Service.

The Stationery Office

Mr. Amess: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what controls are used to assess (a) competitiveness and (b) relative costs, and what measures he takes to limit those costs when purchasing printed matter from The Stationery Office. [66093]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Cabinet Office seeks to achieve best value for money from all of its purchasing activities whether it is buying printed matter or other goods and services.

Cabinet Office Print Procurement arrangements are currently handled via the Central Office of Information which places work with suppliers who have been appointed after competition and in accordance with EC Public Procurement regulations. The Stationery Office Ltd. is just one of those suppliers and is only used when it is able to provide the most cost-effective solution.

In addition, the Controller of Her Majesty's Stationery Office, acting in her capacity as Queen's Printer, has a number of Print and Publishing contracts with The Stationery Office Ltd. These cover the "Civil Service Year Book", Acts of Parliament, Measures of the Synod of the Church of England, Statutory Instruments, Statutory Rules of Northern Ireland, Command Papers, and the London, Belfast and Edinburgh Gazettes. The contracts, which were let on 30 September 1996 as part of the privatisation exercise undertaken by the last Administration, expire on various dates between 30 September 2000 and 30 September 2001. The process of re-tendering under EC Public Procurement procedures will commence in April 1999.

If The Stationery Office Ltd. decides to bid for any Cabinet Office contract it is treated no differently from any other company submitting tenders for the work.

Commercial Lobbyists

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what rules or guidance his Department has to govern the (a) formal and (b) informal interaction between his civil servants and commercial lobbyists. [66205]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the Prime Minister to my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 27 July 1998, Official Report, column 4.

SCOTLAND

National Lottery (Staffing)

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff are employed by the Scottish Office, the Scottish Sports Council, the Scottish Arts Council and other public bodies in connection with administration of the National Lottery; and what are the annual costs involved in administering and allocating grants within Scotland under the various National Lottery schemes. [63855]

Mr. Galbraith: [holding answer 15 December 1998]: The number of staff employed and the annual costs involved in connection with the administration of the National Lottery are as follows:

	Number of staff	£
The Scottish Office	[1]1.5	50,000
Scottish Arts Council	[1]35	[2]1,908,000
Scottish Sports Council	[1]35	[2]1,206,647

[1] Staff numbers are full time equivalent. The numbers of staff involved in Lottery issues fluctuate throughout the year.
[2] Figures relate to 1997–98.

The Millennium Commission, the National Heritage Memorial Fund and the National Lottery Charities Board also distribute Lottery funds in Scotland. These bodies operate on a UK-wide basis. It is not possible to estimate precisely the numbers of staff or administration costs associated with their work in Scotland.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Service (Race Relations)

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the report of the Prison Service Race Relations Group. [66707]

Mr. George Howarth: A copy of the eighth report of the Prison Service Race Relations Group to the Prisons Board has been placed in the Library.

Young Offenders Institution

Mr. Thorn Cross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many hours a week are spent by prisoners at Thorn Cross Young Offenders Institution, Cheshire, on education, community work, preparation for employment and work to change offending behaviour; and how this compares with time spent on similar activities at other young offenders institutions. [66248]

Mr. George Howarth: The Prison Service does not record separately the time spent on all of the activities listed.

For the financial year 1998–99 to the end of December, the average weekly time spent in education by prisoners at Thorn Cross was 13.2 hours. This compares with an average across all young offender institutions of 5.9 hours.

This includes daytime education, vocational training courses, construction and industrial training courses and evening education classes.

The average weekly time spent on total purposeful activities at Thorn Cross for the same period was 49.3 hours. The average for all young offender institutions was 22.0 hours.

Total purposeful activity includes education, training, employment in prisoner enterprise service workshops, employment in prison farms, gardens, kitchens and messes, cleaning and domestic work in the prison, resettlement and rehabilitation activity and physical education.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average cost for each place on the high-intensity training pilot scheme at Thorn Cross Young Offenders Institution, Cheshire. [66250]

Mr. George Howarth: £22,700 per year.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average weekly cost of keeping a prisoner at a young offenders' institution. [66244]

Mr. George Howarth: The Prison Service Annual Report and Accounts, copies of which are in the Library, provide information on the average annual cost per place by establishment type, however, this includes establishment costs only and excludes Prison Service headquarters overheads. The average annual net operating cost per place in a young offender institution for 1997–98 was £18,400.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what basis prisoners are selected for a place on the high-intensity training pilot scheme at Thorn Cross Young Offenders Institution, Cheshire. [66249]

Mr. George Howarth: Young offenders are considered on the basis of applications made by the young offender himself or on the recommendation of his probation officer, personal officer, court or family. Applicants must be category D prisoners suitable for open conditions. Those serving sentences for sexual offences, offences against children or offences involving serious violence are not eligible. Applicants must have a sufficient period of their sentence remaining to enable them to complete the course before release. Those applicants who meet these criteria are interviewed and assessed by a team of staff from Thorn Cross, which includes a psychologist, to identify those with the greatest potential to benefit from the high-intensity training scheme.

Cellphone Jammers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the letter of 20 September to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, what he has done to keep under review the possible use of cellphone jammers to disrupt criminal activity. [65396]

Mr. Boateng: The Home Office is looking at these devices to determine their suitability for police use.

Visa Applications

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the (a) target time and (b) average actual time between applications for renewal of visas and decisions for nationals of (i) Bahrain and (ii) China currently in the United Kingdom. [65755]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: 2,280 applications for further leave to remain by nationals of Bahrain and of China were decided in the public enquiry offices on the day of application in 1998; and 1,260 postal applications were decided within 16–17 weeks in respect of both nationalities. We aim to decide all applications in the shortest possible time.

State of Emergency Regulations

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which department of Government have responsibility for keeping the UK State of Emergency regulations under review; when the last review was made; if he will undertake his own departmental review of the regulations; and if this matter has been included in the general review of international obligations announced on 3 July 1997. [65999]

Mr. George Howarth: The Home Office has overall responsibility for any emergency regulations that might be made under the powers contained in the Emergency Powers Act 1920. However, as the Act covers a wide range of subjects, a number of other Departments might also be involved if regulations were needed.

A review of the potential requirements was carried out in 1995. A fresh review involving departments generally, which includes considering Millennium related issues, is in progress. Until a situation requiring the use of emergency powers arose, any link with international obligations would be hypothetical.

Diarmuid O'Neill

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date findings of the police investigation into the shooting on 23 September 1996 of Diarmuid O'Neill were received by (a) the Police Complaints Authority, (b) the Crown Prosecution Service and (c) Her Majesty's Coroner; and what decisions have been made by each of these bodies concerning criminal or disciplinary action. [66085]

Mr. Boateng: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police tells me that the police investigation report was sent to the Police Complaints Authority (PCA) on 2 November, and to the Crown Prosecution Service (CPS) and Her Majesty's Coroner on 20 November.

As at 18 January, no decisions had been taken in relation to criminal action by the CPS, or to disciplinary action by the PCA, with the Metropolitan Police. Her Majesty's Coroner has no role in relation to such action.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each other European Union country, how many asylum seekers have been accepted in each of the last two years. [66112]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The most recent available information, for 1995 and 1996, is given in the table. This was taken from the report of the Secretariat of the Inter-Governmental Consultation on Asylum, Refugee and Migration Policies in Europe, North America and Australia, entitled "Report on Asylum Procedures— September 1997". No figures were published for Austria, Greece, Ireland, Luxembourg or Portugal.

Cases recognised as refugees and granted asylum in countries in the European Union, 1995 and 1996

Italy	287	157
Netherlands	7,980	8,806
Spain	464	n/a
Sweden	8,460	130

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers have been allowed into the United Kingdom in the last two years; and from which countries they came. [66115]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information is given in the table.

London Fire Brigade

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that the London Fire Brigade can meet any additional fire risk associated with the Millennium Dome. [66090]

Mr. George Howarth: The statutory responsibility for ensuring efficient fire services rests with the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each derogation from Article 8 of the Data Protection Directive 95/46/EC which he plans to provide to the Commission, pursuant to Article 8(6) of that Directive; and if he will make a statement. [65981]

Mr. George Howarth: I am not yet in a position to provide a full list. The derogations will include processing covered by paragraphs 7 and 9 of Schedule 3 of the Data Protection Act 1998, and by any order made under paragraph 10 of that Schedule. Such an order is likely to include the processing of information about criminal offences and criminal convictions for the purpose of preventing or detecting criminal offences; the processing by political parties of information about political opinions in connection with canvassing; and certain processing by the police or other investigating organisations. I am considering further suggestions made in the responses to last August's consultation exercise on subordinate legislation under the Data Protection Act 1998.

Electoral Register

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) the uses made of the Electoral Register for non-electoral purposes and (b) those bodies which have indicated to his review of the use of the Electoral Register for non-electoral purposes that they access the Register; and if he will make a statement. [65967]

Mr. George Howarth: The Home Office Working Party is continuing to examine the case for a change in the way in which the electoral register is made available for non-electoral purposes. The main uses so far identified include credit referencing, direct marketing, and the prevention of fraud and money laundering. There is also some use made by charities for fundraising, and by genealogists for research purposes.

Most of the organisations which have responded do not purchase copies of the register directly: those indicating that they use data at least partially based on the register, but excluding local authorities and other Government Departments, were:

Police Records

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the practice of enforced subject access to police records for purposes which are not related to employment; and if he will make a statement. [65964]

Mr. Boateng: It is difficult to know, in any particular case, whether a subject access application has been "enforced" but in the opinion of the police, the majority of enforced subject access applications are made for employment purposes. We have not undertaken any further research into this practice.

Illegal Immigrants

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many citizens of Slovenia are currently being detained in the UK as illegal immigrants; and what were the equivalent figures for each of the last three years. [65736]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I will write to the hon. Member.

Greyhound Races

Mr. Andy King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will legislate to ensure that all greyhound tracks are required to subscribe to a national registration scheme. [65877]

Mr. George Howarth: We have no plans for such legislation.

Mr. Andy King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will implement a betting levy on greyhound races to be used in establishing a national monitoring authority to supervise races in respect of animal welfare issues. [65876]

Mr. George Howarth: We have no plans to legislate for a levy on greyhound betting.

Overseas Electors

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many British citizens entitled to vote in British elections currently live overseas. [66098]

Mr. George Howarth: The number of British citizens included as overseas electors in the current register published in February 1998 was 17,315. The Office for National Statistics will publish figures for the new register, which comes into force on 16 February 1999, by the end of April.

Drink Driving

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by each police authority area how many breathalysed drivers were deemed to have exceeded the legal limit between Christmas and the New Year in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [65873]

Mr. Boateng: Figures collected by the Home Office do not enable the Christmas and New Year period to be separately identified. The Association of Chief Police Officers, however, has collected figures on the number of positives tests of drivers who had been involved in collisions dealt with by the police during the Christmas Drink Drive campaign for the last two years, and these are in Table 1. Comparable figures for 1996–97 are not available.

The Home Office does, however, collect and publish figures for the month of December, and they are given on Table 2. Figures for 1998 are not yet available, but will be published in the spring.

Probation Officer Statistics

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many probation officers are currently in training; [65764]

(2) what assessment he has made of the prospects for a national shortage of qualified probation officers based on current projections of annual turnover, natural wastage and numbers in training; [65786]

(3) how many probation officers were in training in each year from 1990 to the latest year for which figures are available. [65765]

Mr. George Howarth: There are at present 274 trainee probation officers. A work force planning study is currently being undertaken, and this will provide national data on the number of new probation officers needed over the next five years.

Under the previous training scheme for probation officers, the Home Office sponsored students on Diploma in Social Work courses. The numbers of students starting sponsored courses from 1990 to 1995 was:

1991: 434

1992: 451

1993: 470

1995: 300.

The scheme ended with the 1995 students. It should, however, be noted that research indicated that only about 60 per cent. of those sponsored went on to become probation officers.

Firearms (Compensation)

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many compensation claims have been made to each police force in England for firearms reloading presses indicating the number (a) approved and (b) paid; [65775]

(2) how many claims for compensation have been received to date for (a) Lee Progressive and (b) RCBS Firearms reloading presses; and how many have been (i) approved and (ii) paid. [65776]

Mr. Boateng: Payments have been made in respect of 578 reloading presses surrendered under Option B of the compensation scheme to police forces in England. Lee and RCBS presses are not included within this total as these types of press must be claimed under Option C of the compensation scheme. I regret to say that information is not at present available on the numbers and types of press surrendered and paid under this Option.

Millennium (Policing)

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the extra costs to police forces in England and Wales of policing millennium celebrations; and what plans he has to provide additional resources to meet those costs. [65883]

Mr. Boateng: The police service have estimated that the costs of policing millennium celebrations across England and Wales on 31 December 1999 could be around £12 million out of total available expenditure of over £7 billion.

The Government's spending plans for the police announced last July, and re-stated in a reply my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Salford (Ms Blears) on 2 December 1998, Official Report, columns 194–97, will allow Total Standard Spending on the police in England and Wales to increase by £186 million next year, a 2.7 per cent. increase over 1998–99. Police authorities will be able to increase their spending power by achieving the 2 per cent. efficiency target which has been set and re-investing the savings in front-line policing. There is also some scope for increased spending from council tax. However, the Government expect police authorities to set budgets that are responsible, prudent and reasonable and which do not impose an excessive increase in council tax.

Dr. Bavo Omoviola

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the proposed deportation of Dr. Bavo Omoviola (H.O. Ref 0138995); and if he will make a statement. [66327]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Home Secretary and I have received a number of representations both from Members of this House, friends and supporters of Dr. Omoviola, and representatives of his local community. Full and careful consideration is being given to these representations.

Crime Reduction (Flintshire)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much has been made available for the crime reduction programme in Flintshire; and if he will make a statement. [66421]

Mr. Boateng: Under the crime reduction programme, £250 million is available over the next three years for England and Wales for projects which offer a significant and sustained impact on crime. We will be announcing in due course the allocation of funding as each of the programme's initiatives is launched.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money has been made available for the Targeted Policing Scheme in Flintshire; and if he will make a statement. [66422]

Mr. Boateng: £32 million is available over the next three years for the development of targeted policing in England and Wales as part of the crime reduction programme. The closing date for police forces to apply to be one of the first 10 projects, due to start from April, is 29 January and, as a result, no decisions have yet been taken on the location of the projects.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cumulative cost to his Department of ministerial use of RAF flights in the year to 1 May 1997. [64739]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 11 January 1999]: As my answer of 9 December 1998, Official Report, column 214, made clear, Ministers are required under the terms of the Ministerial Code always to make efficient and cost-effective travel arrangements. The rules on travel for Ministers are the same as those that applied to the previous Administration. Travel by Ministers on Royal Air Force flights between the 16 month period between 2 May 1997 and 30 September 1998 is not directly comparable with the 12 months of the previous Administration.

The cumulative costs in the year to 1 May 1997 was £7,343.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Books (Funding)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on future funding for school books and library books in Northern Ireland. [65109]

Mr. McFall: The Block Grant allocations to Boards in total will enable the School Library Service to receive £2.8 million in 1999–2000, an increase of 2.6 per cent. In addition, specific provision of £0.5 million has also been made to enhance the school library book stock. The amount is expected to increase to £1 million in each of the following 2 years.

In addition £1.45 million is being allocated to support projects within the National Year of Reading and the School Improvement Programme to enhance literacy and numeracy skills.

Employment Statistics (Foyle)

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many job losses there were in the constituency of Foyle in 1998. [65313]

Mr. Ingram: In 1998 there were 756 confirmed redundancies in the constituency of Foyle.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for each ward in the constituency of Foyle the percentage of (a) people of working age in employment, (b) males of working age in employment, (c) females of working age in employment, (d) people unemployed, (e) males unemployed and (f) females unemployed, in (i) December 1997 and (ii) December 1998. [65347]

Mr. Ingram: The latest figures available for those of working age in employment in the Foyle Parliamentary Constituency relate to summer 1998. These are given in the table below, together with corresponding figures for summer 1997. Estimates at ward level are not available.

Mr. Ingram: Estimates of total income (including income from sources other than salaries and wages) are not available at Parliamentary Constituency level. In 1998, the average gross weekly earnings of full-time adult employees in the constituency of Foyle was £339.8. The average for males was £381.9 and the average for females £281.3. Similar information at ward level is not available.

Higher Education

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many full-time higher education places are available to students in the Northern Ireland Western Education and Library Board area. [65308]

Mr. McFall: There were 2,864 students enrolled on full-time higher education courses at institutions located in the Western Education and Library Board area in 1997–98. Enrolment figures for 1998–99 are not yet available.

Student Nurses

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland at which locations student nurse training places are provided; how many of the places at each location have been filled by applicants; if there is a shortage of nurses in Northern Ireland; and if she will make a statement. [65291]

Mr. McFall: Pre-registration student nurse training is commissioned by the Department of Health and Social Services through a contract arrangement with Queen's university of Belfast. For 1998–99 the number of pre-registration places included in the contract were 425, of which 419 were taken up by applicants.

I am satisfied that we do not face the same nursing recruitment and retention difficulties as there may be in other parts of the United Kingdom. There is no immediate concern about a shortage of nurses available to meet the requirements of the HPSS in Northern Ireland. However, I have asked my Department to monitor the situation.

Schools (Preparatory Departments)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland at which schools there are facilities for preparatory departments; and how many pupils are enrolled in each of these preparatory departments. [65484]

Electricity

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many complaints she received about Northern Ireland Electricity services during December 1998; what proposals she has to nationalise the electricity distribution systems in Northern Ireland; and if she will make a statement. [65485]

Mr. Ingram: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State received some 30 complaints and inquiries about the disruption to power supplies caused by the storms in late December. In addition, the independent Director General of Electricity Supply for Northern Ireland, who has the statutory duty to protect the interests of consumers in respect of continuity of supply and quality of supply services provided, has received some 1,050 complaints and inquiries. The Director has sought a full and detailed report from NIE by 31 January 1999 on the company's response to the problems encountered by consumers over the Christmas holiday period. The Secretary of State met NIE on 6 January and expressed her concern about the difficulties faced by consumers. NIE agreed to provide the Secretary of State with a copy of the report being prepared for the Director. The Government have no plans to nationalise the electricity distribution system in Northern Ireland.

Natural Gas

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the estimated populations of the boroughs of (a) Ards, (b) Castlereagh and (c) North Down; what proposals there are to provide a natural gas supply in these three boroughs; and if she will make a statement. [65482]

Mr. Ingram: According to figures produced at the 1991 Population Census the population of these Boroughs is as follows:

	Male	Female	Total
Ards	31,527	33,237	64,764
Castlereagh	28,946	31,853	60,799
North Down	34,284	37,548	71,832

Under the terms of the Development Plan contained in the combined licences for the conveyance and supply of gas to the Greater Belfast area, issued to Phoenix Natural Gas Ltd. on 5 September 1996, the company is required to provide gas to these Boroughs as follows:

Ards by the end of the year 2006

Castlereagh by the end of the year 2005

North Down by the end of the year 2003.

Grammar Schools (Boarders)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland at which grammar schools there are facilities for boarders; and how many boarders there are at each of these schools. [65483]

Mr. McFall: There are facilities for boarders at 9 grammar schools in Northern Ireland and the number of pupils who board are as follows:

School	No. of boarders as at 1 January 1999
Campbell College, Belfast	46
Friend's School, Lisburn	35
Hunterhouse College, Belfast	54
Methodist College, Belfast	137

Policing Commission

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she received the report of the June 1998 police investigation into the circumstances of departmental leaks concerning her telephone conversations about appointments to the Policing Commission; and if she will list (a) the principal conclusions of the report and (b) her responses to each recommendation. [66086]

Marjorie Mowlam: An internal Government investigation into the matter is ongoing. A separate rigorous review of document handling and distribution within the Department has been completed and its recommendations are being considered.

Equality Working Group

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she expects to receive the report of the equality working group chaired by Dr. Joan Stringer; and if she will make a statement. [65993]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Equality Commission Working Group has had four meetings and intend to consult interested parties before finalising its recommendations. They anticipate reporting to me in early March. However, the Secretary of State expects to receive an interim report shortly recommending a structure for the Board, following which the Secretary of State hopes to advertise Commissioner posts.

Wrongful Convictions (Compensation)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer of 10 December 1998, Official Report, column 270, on compensation for wrongful conviction, how many persons have had their convictions quashed by the Court of Appeal in each of the last 10 years. [65994]

Mr. Ingram: The numbers of persons whose convictions have been quashed by the Court of Appeal for Northern Ireland during the last 10 years are, by year:

Year	Number of persons
1992	3
1994	1
1998	1

One person had a separate conviction quashed by the Court of Appeal for England and Wales, has made an application for compensation to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary in respect of the quashing of both convictions. In the case of another person, the court quashed his conviction but ordered a retrial.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Country Strategies

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list those country strategies which have been prepared in consultation with ambassadors for British business; and if those consultees have business interests in the country assessed. [66343]

Clare Short: We have, so far, published fifteen country strategy papers (Bangladesh, Bolivia, Brazil, China, Ghana, Kenya, Malawi, Mozambique, Nepal, Peru, Poland, Russia, South Africa, Ukraine, Vietnam). In developing these country strategies, we have consulted widely including the business community, both in-country and in the UK. Our approach has been to work with established business groups, rather than with individual companies. In developing countries we have consulted with British business associations and local chambers of commerce. In the UK, we have worked with the DTI Area Advisory Groups for specific countries as well as with business groups with a regional or country interest.

Overseas Students

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many students from sub-Saharan Africa were in receipt of her Department's awards to study in Britain in (a) 1989–90 and (b) the latest year for which figures are available; what was the percentage change in awards; and if she will make a statement. [66198]

Clare Short: The number of students from sub-Saharan Africa who were in receipt of my Department's awards to study in Britain in 1989–90 and 1997–98 are as follows:

1997–98: 1,585.

The percentage change in awards is—79 per cent.

This reflects the positive commitment shift from UK-based training to "in-country" and regional training and workshops over the past ten years.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what percentage of her Department's awards to students from sub-Saharan Africa for study in Britain are managed by the British Council. [66219]

Clare Short: All the Department for International Development's awards for training in Britain for students from sub-Saharan Africa are managed by the British Council.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will increase the number of her Department's awards to students from sub-Saharan Africa to study in Britain. [66220]

Clare Short: The provision of awards for study in Britain is determined by the priorities identified in our Country Strategy Papers, in line with my Department's White Paper on poverty elimination. We shall continue to address the needs of Sub-Saharan Africa for skills development by ensuring that training awards and centrally funded scholarship schemes are targeted on those countries which need them most.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what factors underlie her Department's policy for making awards to sub-Saharan Africans to study in Britain; and what assessment she has made of the benefits to (a) the students and (b) Britain. [66224]

Clare Short: The provision of awards for study in Britain is intended to support the development goals and priorities outlined in the White Paper. For Sub-Saharan Africa the need is to build up skills which will contribute to their countries' social and economic development, including scientific and technological development.

Scholarship schemes are reviewed periodically by my Department; the latest review was carried out by Sir William Taylor in August 1997. A number of benefits were identified.

The benefits of interest to DFID are the enhancement of skills and capacity to promote the development of countries in Sub-Saharan Africa. This is the proper objective of all spending of DFID's development assistance.

British Council

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on British Council work, funded by her Department, to support civil society, human rights and democracy in East and West Africa. [66199]

Clare Short: The British Council manage, under contract to the Department for International Development (DFID), a number of projects in East and West Africa which involve support for civil society, human rights and democracy. In East Africa these include a £1.4 million civil society programme in Kenya which funds a range of democratisation and human rights initiatives, a project to strengthen the capacity of the Ugandan National Electoral Commission and programmes to empower women in Kenya, Uganda and Tanzania.

The focus in West Africa is Nigeria. There, the British Council manages a fund for small scale good government initiatives to strengthen accountability and transparency, human rights, democracy and training in conflict management. The annual budget was increased to £500,000 for this financial year, in particular to help with the transition to democratic rule now under way.

In addition, good government is an operational area for the British Council's grant in aid funding in East and West Africa, part of whose costs have been met by my Department.

Palestinian Authority (EU Funds)

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the use of funds donated to the Palestinian Authority by the European Union. [64594]

Mr. Foulkes: The European Union, including individual Member States, has made a major contribution to supporting the Middle East Peace Process by providing 54 per cent. ($1.7 billion) of total development assistance to the Palestinians since 1993. This includes over 650 mecu provided directly by the European Commission to the Palestine Authority. My Department maintains good links with EC officials in Brussels and the West Bank and Gaza, and participates in the Maghreb/Mashreq Working Group at which aid policy towards EC projects for the Palestine Authority is discussed. To enable Member States to assess the effectiveness and efficiency of EC aid we pressed for an evaluation of the EC's recently expired five-year programme of assistance for the Palestinians. We understand that this evaluation is soon to be finalised, and expect to receive the findings shortly.

Misappropriated Aid

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 11 January 1999, Official Report, column 23, if she will list (a) the countries and (b) the projects in respect of which overseas expenditure was misappropriated through corruption or fraud in 1996–97 and 1997–98; what prosecutions have taken place in respect of these amounts, and with what outcome; and if any of the money has been recovered. [66595]

Clare Short: In each of the following projects the amount shown was not properly accounted for and we have concluded that this was, or may have been, due to fraud. To date no prosecutions have been mounted and none of the money has been recovered although some locally engaged staff have been dismissed in two of these cases. Investigations are still proceeding into each of the 1997–98 cases. I cannot of course give details of these ongoing cases which could prejudice any proceedings which might take place.

1996–97: Zambia: Health and Population Sector, £6,287. The loss from a locally operated imprest account was investigated thoroughly but there was insufficient evidence against any individual for a successful prosecution. Arrangements for financial management have since been tightened.

1997–98: (1) Bangladesh: Population and Health Consortium, £45,633; (2) Kenya: National Museums, £1,000. The figure for 1997–98 in my answer of 11 January 1999 included an estimated amount of £11,660 which has since been fully and properly accounted for.

Zimbabwe

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her oral answer of 16 December 1998, Official Report, column 954, on Zimbabwe, when the review of the Government's overall relationship with Zimbabwe was announced; what are the terms of reference of the review; what progress has been made; what plans she has to publish its conclusions; and if she will make a statement. [66488]

Clare Short: As I said in my letter of 14 January 1999, I am not quite sure how to make the position any clearer than I did in the House on 16 December. I had hoped that the hon. Lady would by now understand the process in which my Department is currently engaged.

Since this Government's creation of the Department for International Development and publication of the White Paper on International Development, we have been engaged in a process of consulting and reviewing our country strategies across the world, to bring them into line with the new principles, policies and objectives contained in the White Paper. As part of this process, we are reviewing our Zimbabwe strategy, as I mentioned in my answer to the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on 16 December 1998. Some of the new strategies have already been published, and the new Zimbabwe strategy will be published in early 1999. This will help to make clear the differences between our approach and that of the previous Administration.

I have already explained to the House that our policy in Zimbabwe will be based on eliminating poverty, partly by promoting a transparent and poverty-focused approach to land reforms. We have also made this clear to the Government of Zimbabwe. We are not reviewing that policy: it has been clear since we formed our Government.

HEALTH

Mental Health Code of Practice

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, in relation to paragraph 26.3 of the Mental Health Code of Practice for England, he will indicate (a) who takes the decisions on what would be in the child's best interest, (b) who the subsection is primarily aimed at and (c) for what reasons the subsection is drafted in wide terms. [65181]

Mr. Hutton: Paragraph 26.3 of the revised Mental Health Act Code of Practice, laid before Parliament on 3 December 1998, was included to ensure that visits by a child to a patient detained under the Mental Health Act 1983 are considered in relation to the child's best interests as well as the patient's, and that such decisions are recorded and monitored. The child should be treated as an individual with his or her own needs, and any decision to allow a child to visit a patient should be a positive one that it would be in their best interests.

Directions have already been issued to the three special hospitals regarding arrangements for visits by children. We intend to issue separate guidance as soon as possible to assist all other hospitals that take detained patients, and social services departments, in drawing up child visiting policies. This will be subject to prior consultation. Decisions on whether a child should visit will be the responsibility of the hospital managers, and hospital policies will set out the arrangements for deciding whether a child should visit a patient. Such arrangements will need to take account of the significant role that those with parental responsibility have in allowing such visits. Written hospital policies will also set out those circumstances when parental consent alone will be sufficient to allow a child to visit a patient, and where this is not sufficient, who else should be involved in the decision-making process.

Recording of visits will allow hospital staff, with local social services departments, to monitor visits and regularly review the desirability of continuing visits by a child should the particular circumstances surrounding the patient, or the ward, change. The environment in which visits by children take place will be important when considering the child's best interests.

Paragraph 26.3 of the Code is drafted in wide terms to ensure that all visits by children are considered in this way. In the majority of cases, decisions will be straightforward, and will not affect current visiting practices. However, where hospitals or units care for mentally disordered offenders or those patients with more severe forms of mental illness policies on visiting will need to be more detailed and rigorously enforced.

Cancer Services

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made on the implementation of the Calman/Hine report on the organisation and delivery of cancer services in the North London region; and if he will make a statement. [65063]

Mr. Hutton: In that part of the London Region which was formerly within the North Thames Region, the majority of health authorities have focused initially on breast cancer services and have agreed standards of care for their cancer units based on the guidance "Improving Outcomes in Breast Cancer" published in July 1996. Progress has also been made on the designation of those units that will provide services for colorectal, lung and gynaecological cancers. Work is planned within the new London Region to harmonise the standards and processes adopted by the different health authorities and to jointly agree future milestones for the designation process. Also provisionally designated centres are continuing to develop protocols of care for each cancer.

The network of care and centre unit links in London are complex, particularly north of the Thames. Further work will be carried out jointly by the new London Regional Office, health authorities, centres and units to clarify these networks, and to ensure that the protocols of care and centre unit links are developed properly.

Paediatric Physiotherapy

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Government have taken to ensure that children receive paediatric physiotherapy in line with their statements. [65499]

Mr. Hutton: Following the consultation on the Green Paper "Excellence for All Children", my right hon. Friends, the Secretaries of State for Health and Education and Employment set up a joint working group to consider how to improve arrangements for providing speech and language therapy to children with special educational needs. This will include discussion of other therapies, including physiotherapy, which may form part of a statement of special educational needs.

Electroconvulsive Therapy

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people received ECT (a) with and (b) without consent in each of the last five years. [65908]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not available centrally. The Department is undertaking a one-off survey on electroconvulsive therapy to cover activities in mental health trusts and other private hospitals and clinics over a three month period from January to March 1999. The results will be available later this year.

Older People (Care)

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what initiatives he is taking to improve the recuperation and rehabilitation services available for older people. [65323]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 14 January 1999]: A letter issued by the Government in 1997 entitled "Better Services for Vulnerable People" presented a programme of work which included as one of its objectives the improvement of recuperation and rehabilitation services for older people. It focused on three specific initiatives:

the development of joint investment plans in continuing care and mental health;

a national development programme which focuses on rehabilitation;

the development of a national framework for multi-disciplinary assessment in acute and community health care settings, jointly with social services.

This initiative was aimed at all vulnerable people but specifically mentioned older people as a priority for early work.

Through the additional £159 million winter pressures funding announced in November 1998 and the £65 million additional funds made available in the summer to support sustained reductions in waiting lists, health authorities and National Health Service trusts working with social services have been required to target investment in better community rehabilitation and recuperation schemes to enable patients to return home safely.

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the timetable for National Health Service trusts to take action to ensure they have in place adequate resources and quality assurance systems for older people in hospital. [65319]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 14 January 1999]: A Health Circular (HSC 1998/220) was distributed to chief executives of all health authorities and NHS trusts on 27 November 1998, together with a copy of the report commissioned from Health Advisory Service 2000 "Not Because They Are Old" concerning the care of older people on acute wards in hospital, requiring immediate appropriate remedial action where the essentials of care are not being provided.

The national service framework for older people will set standards for the care of older people. Progress against these standards will be monitored and performance will be made public. The national service framework will be developed over the next year to be operational from April 2000.

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will carry out a review of the merits of integrating care of the elderly with acute medical services. [65335]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 14 January 1999]: The new national service framework for older people will focus on those parts of the National Health Service that are particularly important to older people. It will look at how services are organised and delivered, and where appropriate define service models based on best practice.

Mental Health (Nutrition)

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will commission trials to assess the efficacy of nutritional therapy in treating mental health problems; [65975]

(2) what action he is taking to ensure that doctors are aware of evidence linking nutrition and forms of mental illness. [65976]

Mr. Hutton: There is no strong evidence that nutritional deficiencies play a role in the causation of schizophrenia nor that nutritional therapy has a role in its treatment. The Committee on Medical Aspects of Food and Nutritional Policy have set up a subgroup to look at folic acid and the prevention of disease, which includes mental illness.

Child Abuse

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what Government funding is available for voluntary organisations that assist child abuse sufferers. [65968]

Mr. Hutton: Section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 (S64) gives Ministers the power to make grants to voluntary organisations.

During the financial year 1998–99 the Department is providing a total of £416,324 in funding to six voluntary organisations assisting children at risk of, or who have experienced, child abuse;

The organisations are:

Childline, established in 1986 to listen to, comfort and protect children in trouble or danger. Funding for 1998–99, £163,000 core funding and £10,000 for the dedicated line for children in care.

St Christopher's Fellowship, providing care and accommodation to vulnerable children and young people. Funding for 1998–99, £25,000.

Kidscape, a registered charity founded in 1984 to prevent child abuse and bullying. Funding for 1998–99, £30,000.

Parentline UK, a national helpline established in 1993 to contribute to the prevention of child abuse and neglect by providing a service for anyone parenting a child. Funding for 1998–99, £25,000.

Churches Child Protection Advisory Service helps leaders of churches and children's organisations by providing advice and guidance on issues of child abuse and protection, and supporting individual children and families. Funding for 1998–99, £26,550.

Barnardos, a project to support children vulnerable to sexual exploitation and those involved in prostitution. Funding for 1998–99, £111,774.

Opportunities for Volunteering Scheme

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new funding will be made available in 1999–2000 for grants under the Opportunities for Volunteering scheme. [66092]

Mr. Hutton: The Department will provide funding of £6.9 million for the Opportunities for Volunteering Scheme in 1999–2000. The funding will enable existing grant commitments to be met while the Department develops, in consultation with the Opportunities for Volunteering, national voluntary organisations and other interested parties, its overall strategy to promote volunteering and targeting of the scheme. While the strategy is being developed it would not make sense for new Opportunities for Volunteering grants to be made, committing future funding. The position from 2000–01 will be included in the consideration of the strategy.

Young Carers

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what initiatives the Government are undertaking to address problems faced by young carers. [66059]

Mr. Hutton: The National Strategy for Carers, announced by my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister last June, has been looking in depth at the needs of young carers, including, among other issues, at what action is already being taken through schools and how that can be enhanced. A United Kingdom consultative conference was held on 19 November 1998 to discuss how the needs of all carers might be better met and among the delegates present were representatives of young carers organisations. Through our national priorities guidance for health and social services authorities, we are also asking general practitioners, primary care teams and social services authorities to identify carers. We are also testing a new data collection system, the Referrals, Assessments and Packages of Care, in social services departments. Under this system, social services authorities will collect information about the assessments undertaken and carers identified. The data will be broken down by broad age group, including for young people under 18.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cuba

3. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has held with representatives of the Cuban Government on their relations with the United States of America and Britain. [64587]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State visited Cuba in October and held discussions with the Vice-President and a number of Cuban Ministers. In November she received Sr. Cabrisas, Cuban Minister for Foreign Trade and discussed UK bilateral relations, among other subjects. Our Ambassador in Havana last month raised Cuba/US relations with the Cuban Government.

Middle East Peace Process

15. Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance he has provided to the Palestinian Authority in combating terrorism. [64601]

Mr. Fatchett: We make a significant contribution to the $8 million EU package of counter-terrorism assistance to the Palestinian Authority to help it deliver its security commitments.

22. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the prospects for peace in the middle east following the Wye agreement. [64608]

Mr. Robin Cook: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave in the House today to my hon. Friends the Members for Bolton, South-East (Dr. Iddon) and for Milton-Keynes, South-West (Dr. Starkey).

27. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in the middle east peace process; and if he will make a statement. [64613]

29. Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to support the Palestinian Authority in developing a sound economy. [64615]

32. Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the middle east peace process. [64618]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer my hon. Friends to the oral answer given today by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary to my hon. Friends the Members for Bolton, South-East (Dr. Iddon) and for Milton Keynes, South-West (Dr. Starkey), Official Report, column 694.

Government Hospitality (Wine)

17. Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of the purchase of wine for Government hospitality purposes. [64603]

Mr. Fatchett: The policy is intended to ensure availability of wines of appropriate quality at reasonable cost for official hospitality hosted by Ministers on behalf of HMG.

Falkland Islands

18. Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the economic future of the Falkland Islands. [64604]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Licence revenue from a well managed fishery has enabled the Falkland Islands Government to build up healthy reserves of more than £143 million without receiving any aid from the UK budget since 1992. The islanders are diversifying their agriculture, promoting tourism and the service sector and investing in better infrastructure and public services, while safeguarding their environment. It is too early to say whether there is oil in recoverable quantities in Falklands waters.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals the Government have received from President Clinton concerning negotiations over, and the sovereignty of, the Falkland Islands. [65819]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have received no proposals from President Clinton concerning negotiations over, or the sovereignty of, the Falkland Islands. The American Government have reiterated that they would like to see two of their close friends overcome their differences, but that it is not appropriate for them to be involved.

Franco-British European Defence Initiative

20. Mr. Paul Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications for the United Kingdom's foreign policy of the Franco-British European defence initiative. [64606]

33. Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the foreign policy implications of the Franco-British European defence initiative. [64619]

Mr. Robin Cook: It is firmly in Britain's interests for Europe to speak and act more effectively on the world stage. But, as recent events in Kosovo have shown, a stronger and more coherent European voice in international foreign policy must be backed by a more effective European military capability. The St. Malo Declaration of 4 December set out a framework for building this capacity.

This initiative has been welcomed by the US Government, to whom we have it made it clear that NATO will remain the cornerstone of European security and the basis of our collective defence.

Ethiopia and Eritrea (Border Dispute)

21. Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts have been made by his Department (a) bilaterally and (b) in cooperation with EU partners to encourage the Eritrean Government to respond positively to the proposals presented by the Organisation of African Unity to Ethiopia and Eritrea on 7 and 8 November relating to the settlement of their border dispute. [64607]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have taken advantage of bilateral meetings with Eritrean Government representatives in Asmara and London to reinforce the message that full acceptance of the OAU proposals provide the way forward.

After the OAU issued its proposals on 7–8 November we supported an EU Presidency statement urging both parties to commit themselves to full acceptance. The Presidency Declaration of 16 December reiterated this position.

Syria

23. Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Syria. [64609]

Mr. Fatchett: I visited Syria from 8 to 10 December and had useful meetings with President Asad and Foreign Minister Shara'a. Our talks focused on the Middle East Peace Process, Iraq and bilateral issues.

Iraq

24. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation in Iraq. [64610]

Mr. Robin Cook: We remain committed to maintaining international pressure on Iraq to fulfil its obligations and to preventing Iraq from threatening its neighbours once again. We are at one with our friends and allies on this. Our main priorities are to resolve outstanding disarmament questions and to improve further the humanitarian situation in Iraq. Discussions in the Security Council are focusing on both issues. We are also looking with EU partners at proposals for alleviating the suffering to which Saddam Hussein continues to subject the Iraqi people.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the claim by Mr. Scott Ritter that UNSCOM supplied information to five countries in return for intelligence from their sources; and if he will make a statement. [66102]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: UNSCOM is entitled to seek information and advice from all possible sources in pursuit of its mandate to destroy Iraq's Weapons of Mass Destruction capability.

UNSCOM Executive Chairman Richard Butler has made it clear that he has always insisted on all UNSCOM activity being carried out strictly in pursuit of its disarmament mandate, not to benefit any individual member state.

Afghanistan (Women)

25. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the position of women in Afghanistan; and if he will make a statement. [64611]

Mr. Fatchett: We receive frequent representation about the plight of women and girls in Afghanistan. At the start of our EU Presidency last year we drew up and agreed a new Common Position on Afghanistan. This urges the Afghan factions to end discrimination and promote equal rights. We ensured that UN Security Council Resolutions 1193 and 1214 did the same. We will continue to urge all factions fully to respect human rights.

Sudan

26. Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation in Sudan. [64612]

Mr. Fatchett: The situation in Sudan continues to cause us great concern. While humanitarian conditions in some of the areas worst hit by famine have stabilised, UN agencies expect there to be continuing substantial need in 1999. The suffering is, of course, made much worse by the continuing civil war.

We are therefore working with the UN and others to improve the delivery of aid at the same time as pressing all sides to work towards a peaceful settlement to the civil war—the only long-term solution to the humanitarian crisis.

We continue to support the IGAD peace process as the best way to bring about a negotiated end to the civil war. In this context, UN Special Envoy Vraalsen will shortly be visiting the region, as will an IGAD Partners Forum mission. We are lending our full support to these initiatives.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the British Ambassador to Sudan to return to Khartoum. [66490]

Mr. Fatchett: When my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary ordered the withdrawal of British staff from our Embassy in Khartoum on 27 August 1998, he said that it was only a temporary withdrawal and that he hoped the necessary conditions for the return of staff would be re-established before too long.

We are in regular contact with the Sudanese Government through their Embassy in London. British staff from our Embassy in Khartoum, who are currently based in Nairobi, have also made a number of visits to Sudan.

Arms Control and Disarmament

28. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what current discussions he is having on arms control and disarmament; and if he will make a statement. [64614]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are committed to the measures set out in the Strategic Defence Review, and are pursuing these with a wide range of interested parties. In particular, we will participate fully in forthcoming negotiations in the Conference on Disarmament on a Fissile Material Cut-off Treaty, and on a verification Protocol to the Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention, and are working for the successful completion of talks on the adaptation of the Conventional Forces in Europe Treaty.

United Nations (Subscriptions)

30. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of the United States of America concerning the payment of arrears to the United Nations. [64616]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary last raised this issue with Madeleine Albright early last year. Since then we have used our Presidencies of the EU and the G8, and numerous other contacts at ministerial and official level, to urge the US quickly to settle its arrears to the UN. We will continue to raise this issue with the US Administration and Congress when we judge this will be effective.

Burma

31. Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to encourage democracy in Burma. [64617]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Lincoln (Gillian Merron) in the House today, Official Report, columns 701–02.

St. Helena

34. Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has reached a conclusion on the citizenship rights of St. Helenans. [64621]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral answer I gave earlier in the House today to the hon. Member for Colchester (Mr. Russell), Official Report, column 689.

Kashmir

35. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he proposes to have with representatives of Pakistan and India on their forthcoming discussions about Kashmir. [64622]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral answer I gave in the House today to my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, East (Mr. Heppell), Official Report, column 695.

Russia (Weapons Command and Control)

36. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assurances he has received from the Russian Government about the integrity of its command and control over its weapons of mass destruction. [64623]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have not received any direct assurances. We have, however, taken careful note of statements made by senior Russian representatives assuring the safety and control of Russia's weapons of mass destruction, including a statement of 25 November made by the Russian Minister for Atomic Energy, Mr. Adamov.

Dubai

37. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about relations with Dubai. [64624]

Mr. Fatchett: Our relations with Dubai, as with the United Arab Emirates as a whole, are very close. We work together closely on a range of international issues. In addition, British exports to Dubai were worth over £900 million in 1997. Despite the general down-turn in the global economy 1998 saw another strong trade performance with UK exports until the end of October alone worth over £1.3 billion. We expect a similar result this year.

Embassies (Business Promotion)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in improving the business promotion activities of British embassies. [64605]

Mr. Fatchett: There is a number of initiatives in progress to strengthen further the export promotion services offered by our 219 commercial posts overseas. Implementation of Export Forum recommendations has given a sharper focus on priority markets, and following the Comprehensive Spending Review we will be creating over 120 new commercial slots overseas. To strengthen our professionalism we have increased interchange between the private sector and FCO/DTI staff and refocused staff training and development programmes. Our expanded Quality Management System shows increased levels of customer satisfaction. 1999 will see further improved levels of service provision with greater use of information technology/Internet based services by overseas commercial posts based on the TradeUk service launched in September 1998.

South Africa (Trade Negotiations)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress in the EU-South Africa trade negotiations. [65659]

Ms Quin: We remain actively committed to finalising a Trade and Cooperation Agreement between the EU and South Africa. We regret that the deadline agreed at the Cardiff European Council for conclusion of the negotiations by the end of 1998 was not met. The Vienna European Council in December 1998 called for the negotiations to be finalised as soon as possible, and no later than the informal Council to be held in March 1999. We will continue to press for a rapid and liberal outcome which honours the EU's commitments to help the South African transition from apartheid, as my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister reiterated to Deputy President Mbeki during his recent visit to South Africa.

British Council (Damascus)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost of recent damage to the British Council offices in Damascus. [65386]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 14 January 1999]: The cost of the damage to the British Council property in Damascus is still being evaluated.

Mr. Bruce Harris

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department has had with the Guatemalan Government concerning the legal case of Mr. Bruce Harris; and if he will make a statement. [65912]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Our Ambassador in Guatemala City has raised the case of Bruce Harris and made known our concerns to the President of the Guatemalan Supreme Court, the President of the Guatemalan Presidential Commission on Human Rights and to the Guatemalan Fiscal General. We shall continue to follow the case closely and to make known our concern to the Guatemalan authorities that the case is conducted in conformity with the human rights standards to which Guatemala is committed under its domestic law and international obligations.

Gibraltar (Fishing)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will define the extent of British waters around Gibraltar. [65505]

Ms Quin [holding answer 14 January 1999]: British waters extend to a limit of three nautical miles around Gibraltar. The limit is restricted to two nautical miles on the west side, in the Bay of Algeciras, where a median line exists between British and Spanish waters. I have placed copies of a map showing territorial waters in the Gibraltar area in the Libraries of the House.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the number of Spanish fishing boats based in Algeciras Bay. [65510]

Ms Quin [holding answer 14 January 1999]: We do not have a reliable figure. We are aware of 33 fishing vessels based in Algeciras port which have been sighted and recorded as entering British waters around Gibraltar. Similar numbers of other vessels based in both La Linea (also in Algeciras Bay) and La Atunara (to the east of Gibraltar) have also been seen in British waters.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many incursions into British waters around Gibraltar have been made by Spanish fishing boats in each of the last three years. [65509]

Ms Quin [holding answer 14 January 1999]: The royal Gibraltar Police recorded 520 occasions on which Spanish fishing boats entered Gibraltar waters in 1998. Detailed records were not kept in previous years.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many arrests of Spanish fishermen unlawfully fishing in British waters around Gibraltar have been made in each of the last three years. [65508]

Ms Quin [holding answer 14 January 1999]: Figures for the arrest of Spanish Fishermen for illegal fishing in British waters around Gibraltar are as follows:

1996: None

1997: 4 fishermen in one incident

1998: 6 fishermen in two incidents.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the definition of the status quo with regard to the activities of Spanish fishing boats in British waters around Gibraltar. [65507]

Ms Quin [holding answer 14 January 1999]: Between 1991 and 1997, Spanish fishermen entered Gibraltar waters and fished in moderate numbers, kept away from the harbour and Admiralty waters, and respected the authority of the law enforcement agencies. We have been seeking to return to that situation, including through discussion with the Spanish authorities.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has evaluated of the use by Spanish fishermen in British waters around Gibraltar of unlawful fishing equipment. [65506]

Ms Quin [holding answer 14 January 1999]: Section 10(b) of the Gibraltar Nature Protection Ordinance 1991 provides that the use of, inter alia, any seine or gill net or any pot or device for raking of sea bed, for the purpose of killing or taking any wild animal, constitutes an offence. The use of any fishing equipment other than fishing lines is therefore unlawful. Spanish fishing boats have used a variety of nets and rakes.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Spanish Foreign Minister on the possibility of a licensing and quota agreement for Spanish fishing boats in British waters around Gibraltar. [66247]

Ms Quin: I have discussed the fishing dispute on several occasions with the Spanish Minister for European Affairs. In these discussions, the possibility of a licensing regime has been raised as one option for the way forward.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Millennium Compliance (Emergency Calls)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he has taken to ensure that the telephone network in Lancashire is millennium compliant, with particular reference to emergency calls. [66025]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 18 January 1999]: In Lancashire, as elsewhere in the UK, Oftel has responsibility for safeguarding the integrity of the core telecommunications network and has established a Year 2000 project to monitor and assess the telecommunications industry's preparations. Oftel has taken steps to ensure that telecoms services are not disrupted over the millennium. All the main network operators, who are co-operating with Oftel and the Home Office, are taking the issue seriously, and have outlined their plans to meet this challenge. The main network operators already have sophisticated systems in place to safeguard the provision of emergency services over their networks and their current work on the Millennium Bug is building on the resilience already built in to these companies' systems. Oftel is keeping the preparations of the network operators under review.

Action 2000 is working closely with Oftel to ensure rigorous assessment programmes are in place, and a peer review of the telecom operators is already being undertaken, permitting the industry's most technically able experts to collaborate in checking peer companies' systems. It is difficult to make a precise assessment of the likelihood of interruption. Oftel expects that the principal sectors of the industry will be Year 2000 compliant during the first half of 1999.

Miller Dywidag

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the official trading status of Miller Dywidag Joint Venture. [66337]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 18 January 1999]: Companies House has no record of Miller Dywidag as having incorporated status.

Ministerial Appointments

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs was appointed; when he received his first red box; and when he first went to his departmental office. [65622]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 14 January 1999]: The Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs was appointed on 28 July 1998. He first went to the Department on 29 July 1998 and received his first red box on 30 July 1998.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Minister for Science was appointed; when he received his first red box; and when he first went to his departmental office. [65621]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 14 January 1999]: The Minister for Science was appointed on 28 July. He received his first Ministerial box on Tuesday 11 August and first went to his departmental office on 30 July.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry was appointed; when he received his first red box; and when he first went to his departmental office. [65624]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 14 January 1999]: The Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry was appointed on 4 January 1999. He has not received any red boxes to date, preferring to work from the Department. He first went into his departmental office on 5 January 1999.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he was appointed; when he received his first red box; and when he first went to his departmental office. [65623]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 14 January 1999]: I was appointed on 23 December 1998. I received my first red box on Christmas Eve, having been in my departmental office during the course of that day.

BAe-GEC Marconi

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will refer the proposed merger of BAe and GEC Marconi to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. [65749]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 18 January 1999]: In the event of such a proposal, it would be necessary to determine whether the merger fell for consideration by the Commission under the EC Merger Regulation, or by the UK authorities under the Fair Trading Act 1973. If a merger fell for consideration under the Fair Trading Act, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry would decide whether or not to refer it to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in the light of the advice of the Director General of Fair Trading. Each case is considered on its own merits.

Competition (Defence Industries)

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the purposes of the proposed Competition Bill will include the creation and encouragement of competition in the United Kingdom in the defence industries. [66330]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The Competition Act will establish a more effective regime to deter and tackle anti-competitive agreements and abuses of dominant market position widely across the economy, including within the defence sector.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the compatibility of EU policy on defence industrial company mergers with his approach to competition matters in the United Kingdom. [66331]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 18 January 1999]: We share the European Commission's view of the importance of taking into account competition policy issues in considering restructuring in the defence industry. Any merger proposals will be considered on their merits by the relevant competition authorities.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 18 November regarding mineshafts. [66585]

Mr. Battle: After having the issues raised in my hon. Friend's letter fully looked into, I replied on 14 January.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 14 December regarding trades union legislation. [66584]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I will write very shortly.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if the term "average cost", with reference to flights by Ministers in his Department, refers to the average cost per passenger; [64721]

(2) what was the total cumulative cost to his Department of ministerial use of RAF flights in the year to 1 May 1997. [64737]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 11 January 1999]: As my answer of 19 November 1998, Official Report, column 838, made clear, Ministers are required under the terms of the Ministerial Code always to make efficient and cost effective travel arrangements. The rules on travel for Ministers are the same as those that applied to the previous Administration. A comparison of travel by Ministers on RAF flights between the 16 month period between 2 May 1997 and 30 September 1998 is not directly comparable with the 12 months of the previous administration.

The average cost contained in my earlier reply referred to the cost per trip and not the individual cost per passenger. This Department was created from the former Departments of the Environment and Transport in June 1997 and also has the additional responsibilities of the Deputy Prime Minister. A direct comparison with previous years is not therefore possible. I am advised that the total cost of Ministerial flights provided by the RAF for the Departments of the Environment and Transport in the year to 1 May 1997 was £6,302. Cabinet Office was responsible for any expenditure incurred by the then Deputy Prime Minister.

Countryside Access

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on Access to the Open Countryside in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [65674]

Mr. Meacher: My Department has received over 2,000 formal responses to our consultation paper, Access to the Open Countryside in England & Wales. In addition, since the closing date for responses to the consultation paper on 5 June, approximately 370 letters have been received from members of the public on this subject, and approximately 400 letters from Members of Parliament. Ministerial colleagues and I have held meetings with a number of organisations representing both landowners and recreational users.

Sewerage Network

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much of the public and private sewerage network is currently subject to (a) infiltration and (b) exfiltration. [65885]

Mr. Meale: The Department does not collect this information. Under section 94 of the Water Industry Act 1991, sewerage undertakers are responsible for the effectual drainage of their areas and for maintaining their pipework. From meetings held with the water and sewerage industry last year, there appears to be no evidence that exfiltration or infiltration in public sewers is causing any major problems. I understand that Water UK will be carrying out research in this area later this year.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the necessary change in investment in the sewerage system following the inclusion of the condition of sewerage assets in the new sustainable development indicators. [65886]

Mr. Meale: Levels of investment in the public sewerage system are a matter for sewerage undertakers and the Director General of Water Services. In "Raising the Quality" (September 1998), we published guidance to the Director General of Water Services which covered sewer maintenance as well as investment in new assets. The Director General subsequently published his own forward look at the necessary investment programmes of water companies and their price implications in "Prospects for Prices" (October 1998).

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the water companies OFWAT has penalised for failing to meet their targets on flooding from sewers and collapses (a) between 1990 and 1995 and (b) from 1995 to date. [65887]

Mr. Meale: Companies' performance is reported each year in the Director General of Water Services' annual Report on Levels of Service. The 1997–98 Report shows that the proportion of properties at risk from sewer flooding more than twice in every ten years has fallen substantially from 0.13 per cent. in 1990–91 to 0.06 per cent. in 1997–98. The annual Report also explains regulatory action taken in respect of companies about whose performance the Director has concerns. Where the Director has concerns over levels of sewer flooding, he requires the company to take remedial action. The Director does not currently have powers to impose fines, but has indicated his intention to take sewer flooding and other aspects of companies' past performance into account when setting price limits.

Sewer flooding that affects customers' properties is penalised by compensation available to customers in the Guaranteed Standards Scheme. In 1997–98, payments of up to a maximum of £1,000 were made to 4,367 customers who made claims.

There are no targets for sewer collapses but they are taken into account when OFWAT assesses the serviceability to customers of the companies assets. Serviceability is in turn taken into account when the Director sets companies' price limits.

Water Extraction

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many gallons of water have been extracted by Thames Water from the River Darenth in each of the last five years; and how many gallons it is estimated will be extracted in each of the next five years. [66008]

Mr. Meale: Thames Water Utilities Ltd. make no direct abstractions from the River Darenth itself but the company does abstract groundwater from the river's catchment. The actual and forecast groundwater abstractions by the company from this catchment are set out below. Phase 1 of the Darenth Action Plan came into operation on 1 January 1997 and the forecast figures assume that Phase 2 will become operational, as planned, in 2001–02.

million gallons

Year	Actual abstraction
1993–94	5002.3
1994–95	6231.7
1995–96	6339.8
1996–97	5499.6
1997–98	4792.1

million gallons

Year	Forecast abstraction
1998–99	4818.0
1999–2000	4818.0
2000–01	4818.0
2001–02	4095.0
2002–03	4095.0

Unadopted Roads

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what is his estimate of the number of unadopted roads in England; [65896]

(2) what is his current estimate of the number of unadopted roads made up in each of the last five years, excluding newly-built estates; [65897]

(3) what estimate he has made of the number of people who live on unadopted roads in England. [65895]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer to a written question on the same subject on 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 118, from my hon. Friend the Member for North-East Derbyshire (Mr. Barnes).

Given that no central records of unadopted roads exist, it is also not possible to give an overall estimate for England of the number of people who live in them.

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the financial allocation made to local authorities for the making up of unadopted roads in the local government settlement 1999–2000. [65898]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Financial allocations to local authorities in the 1999–2000 Revenue Support Grant settlement are based on characteristics of local authorities including the lengths of adopted roads weighted to reflect their classifications. RSG is however an unhypothecated grant. The settlement takes no account of unadopted roads, whose upkeep is, in the majority of cases, the responsibility of the frontagers.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish his consultation paper on the treatment of contaminated land. [66091]

Mr. Meale: Our target date for publication of a consultation paper, which will set out a revised draft of the statutory guidance to be issued under Part IIA of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, is the end of February at the latest.

New Housing

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of new housing was built on greenfield sites in each year from 1992 to 1998. [65759]

Mr. Raynsford: There is no specific definition of 'greenfield' land. The information available relates to housing built on land that has not been previously developed. The Department's Land Use Change Statistics for England provide information on (a) the percentage of new dwellings (excluding conversions) built on land not previously developed for urban uses and (b) the proportion of land used for new housing that was not previously developed. The table shows results for the above measures for the period 1992 to 1996 (the most recent available).

Previously undeveloped land used for new housing

Year	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996[2]	Average 1992–1996
Percentage of new dwellings[1] built on land not previously developed	47	48	51	47	47	48

Waste Strategy

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what responses he has received to his consultation paper on a waste strategy, "Less Waste: More Value"; what is the time scale for implementation of that waste strategy; what conclusions he has reached on the subjects of (a) waste minimisation and (b) recycling; and if he will make a statement. [65769]

Mr. Meale: The Government's consultation paper on reviewing the waste management strategy for England and Wales, "Less Waste: More Value", was launched by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment on 9 June 1998. During the consultation period over 28,000 copies of the document were distributed. The consultation period ended on 25 September 1998, by which time 652 submissions had been received by my Department, including 267 submissions from local authorities. In addition, 137 members of the public wrote to Ministers following the launch of the consultation document and its attendant publicity in the media.

"Less Waste: More Value" set out a range of options and questions on what policies the Government should pursue, in order to:

- encourage, and emphasise the importance of, actions to minimise the waste that we produce (both in terms of volume and hazardousness); and
- substantially increase the recycling and composting rates for waste, as part of an integrated strategy which also addresses the issue of waste that it does not make sense to recycle.

We are now in the process of developing these policies, which will be published for consultation, as part of the draft of the new waste strategy for England and Wales. The Government intend to publish a draft of the new waste strategy during the Spring of 1999 and will consult with all interested parties during the Summer. We plan to publish a final version of the new waste strategy as a Command Paper before the end of 1999.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what advice he has sought regarding the strategy to be pursued to achieve the Government's waste recycling targets for Greater London; how the Government intend to achieve these targets without placing greater reliance on landfill sites; what is his strategy regarding incineration and the development of combined heat and power; and if he will make a statement. [65771]

Mr. Meale: The new Mayor of London will have a duty to prepare an integrated municipal waste management strategy for London. This will have regard to the national waste strategy, due to be published later this year, and local authority waste recycling plans. In the meantime, the Government are providing London Boroughs with £12 million under the Capital Challenge Programme to boost recycling levels in London.

Waste to energy incineration must be considered in the context of an integrated approach to waste management, which encourages waste minimisation, re-use and recycling. Where waste incineration with energy recovery is the best practicable environmental option, the potential for incorporating CHP should always be considered in order to maximise the energy which is recovered.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what role he envisages for incineration in achieving his waste strategy for London; what plans he has to place a moratorium on the development or expansion of incinerator capacity; what advice his Department will issue to local authorities on (a) the scale of any future facilities and (b) the length of disposal contracts for incineration; and if he will make a statement. [65770]

Mr. Meale: Waste incineration is currently an integral part of waste disposal in London and in the consultation paper issued last year on the national waste strategy the Government took the view that there was likely to be a need for higher levels of incineration with energy recovery in future. We do not plan to place a moratorium on the development or expansion of incinerator capacity in London, nor do we plan to issue advice to local authorities on the scale of future facilities or the length of disposal contracts.

Bus Fuel Rebate Scheme

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much was paid (a) in total and (b) to individual bus companies under the bus fuel rebate scheme in each of the last five years. [66017]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information requested in (a) is as follows:

Year	£ million
1993–94	220
1994–95	224
1995–96	229
1996–97	228
1997–98	227

Expenditure is expected to be £270 million in this financial year, reflecting the increase in the rate of rebate in line with this year's increase in duty.

The amount paid to individual bus companies is regarded as commercially confidential.

Biosafety Protocol

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if Her Majesty's Government support the application of the Biosafety Protocol's proposed procedures for Advanced Informed Agreement to agricultural commodities and commodities designated for processing, where such commodities contain genetically modified organisms or parts thereof; and if he will oppose any attempts in the protocol negotiations to exclude such commodities from the AIA procedures. [66036]

Mr. Meale: The Government's view is that the Protocol should cover the transboundary movement of all living modified organisms (LMOs), including LMOs that are agricultural commodities and commodities intended for processing. The Advanced Informed Agreement procedures should apply to transboundary movements of LMOs intended for deliberate release, including commodities. The UK is still considering its position on appropriate procedures for commodities intended for processing and will press hard for adequate coverage to secure environmental safety. Commodities that consist of non-living products of LMOs should not be covered by the protocol since the scope set out in the mandate from the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity is to develop a protocol focusing specifically on the transboundary movement of living modified organisms.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if Her Majesty's Government supports proposals to include provisions in the Biosafety Protocol to allow countries to take socio-economic considerations into account when reaching a decision on whether to grant advanced informed agreement to allow the proposed import of a GMO to proceed. [65963]

Mr. Meale: The Government consider that the basis for decision-making under the Protocol should be a scientific risk assessment, but recognise that some countries may wish to consider socio-economic aspects in reaching their decision on whether to grant advance informed agreement.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions whether his Department will support proposals to include provisions for a regime for strict liability within the Biosafety Protocol. [65962]

Mr. Meale: The Government acknowledge the importance of the issue of liability and redress in the context of damage to biological diversity and its relevance to the Biosafety Protocol. For this reason, the UK and the European Commission last year hosted a small international workshop to explore the issues arising in relation to the Protocol. The Government consider that provisions for a regime for strict liability cannot be developed in the short time remaining to complete the negotiations. I hope, however, that it will be possible at the final meeting of the Biosafety Working Group developing the Protocol to agree how the matter might be taken forward, bearing in mind the ongoing discussions in the context of Article 14 of the Convention on Biological Diversity.

Driving Instructors

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 9 December 1998, Official Report, column 194, over the four year period under consideration (a) how many driving instructors were accepted for registration, (b) how many of these were subsequently removed from registration within (i) six months, (ii) one year, (iii) 18 months, and (iv) two years, (c) what was the average period that those removed from the register had previously been registered, and (d) how many people paid examination fees to the Driving Standards Agency. [65725]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 18 January 1999]: During the four years up to 30 November 1998, 7,225 new instructors have been added to the Register of Approved Driving Instructors (ADI). Of these six have been subsequently removed as a result of failing a check test of their instructional ability following three successive check test failures. None were removed in the first 18 months of their registration. Three were removed within their first two years of registration, and the other three were removed between two and four years of registration. The average period they were on the Register was 26 months.

To join the register, a person has to pass a three part examination—a written test, a practical test of driving ability and a practical test of instructional ability for which the fees are currently £50 for the written test and £62 for practical test. During the same 4 year period, some 24,000 people started the ADI qualifying process, taking a total of 46,000 written tests and the Driving Standards Agency also conducted 58,164 practical tests (figures for the two practical tests are not compiled separately). Some of the tests would have been further attempts by unsuccessful candidates.

Chapter 2 Aircraft

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions from what date all Chapter 2 aircraft are currently planned to be banned from United Kingdom airports; and what proposals there are in (a) the UK and (b) the EU to review that date. [66149]

Ms Glenda Jackson: From 1 April 2002, Chapter 2 aircraft will be banned from UK airports other than in the most exceptional circumstances. There are no proposals in the UK or the EU to review that date.

London Underground

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the amounts of compensation payable by London Underground as a result of the breakdown of the tube system on 12 January. [66390]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Statistics regarding compensation claims arising from specific incidents are not routinely analysed by London Underground. It is too early to establish how many people will request compensation for service problems experienced on 12 January, An average claim under the Customer Charter is, however, £2.60.

Commercial Lobbyists

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what rules or guidance his Department has to govern the (a) formal and (b) informal interaction between his civil servants and commercial lobbyists. [66215]

Mr. Meale: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the Prime Minister on 27 July 1998, Official Report, column 4, in response to a Question from my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice).

Pesticides

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment he has made of the relative effectiveness of economic instruments over other measures designed to minimise pesticide use; [66213]

(2) what plans he has for a compensation regime for farmers and agricultural producers to offset the effects of a pesticide tax. [66229]

Mr. Meale: The Government have commissioned extensive research work on economic instruments as a component of its pesticide minimisation policy to be used in combination with other measures. In considering the possible introduction of a pesticide tax, we shall look very carefully at the potential impact on farmers and other pesticide users.

Bus Fuel Duty Rebate

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what proportion of bus operators receiving bus fuel duty rebate are using standard diesel fuel; [66104]

(2) how much is spent annually through the bus fuel duty rebate in supporting bus operators using standard diesel fuel. [66106]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 18 January 1999]: Most of the claims for bus fuel duty rebate are for use of standard diesel fuel. The estimated spend this financial year is £267 million.

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to encourage bus operators in receipt of bus fuel duty rebate to adopt ultra low sulphur diesel fuel. [66105]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 18 January 1999]: A number of possible changes to bus Fuel Duty Rebate, to encourage the use of cleaner fuels and vehicles, are being examined with a view to consultation in due course.

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many bus operators are receiving bus fuel duty rebate. [66103]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 18 January 1999]: There are currently 1,800 claimants receiving bus fuel duty rebate. This figure includes subsidiaries or other operating units of larger companies.

School Transport Working Group

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the members of the working group on school transport; and if he will publish the remit of the group, its target deliverables and timetable for action. [65936]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 18 January 1999]: I announced the membership and remit of the School Travel Advisory Group (STAG) in a press notice on 18 December (Working together to improve the journey to school). A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

STAG will work to identify practical ways of reducing car use and improving safety on the journey to school, with a view to making a report to Ministers. It will also oversee the preparation of guidance for local authorities and schools. It is hoped to complete both in the course of the year.

Water Meters

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate how many people will financially (a) benefit and (b) be worse off as a result of the introduction of water meters; if he will provide this information (i) for the population as a whole and (ii) for the population over state retirement age; and if he will make a statement. [66382]

Mr. Meale: The following estimates are taken from the report, "Incidence Effects of Charging for Domestic Water and Sewerage Services" published by my Department in July 1998. This reported the results of modelling work undertaken on behalf of the Department by Maxwell Stamp Plc. The figures relate to households in England and Wales where there is a choice between measured and unmeasured options. The estimates assume no consequent reduction in consumption or tariff rebalancing. The outcome depends on the tariffs adopted by companies for unmeasured and for measured charging.

(i) Under the current tariffs of water undertakers: 40 per cent. of households would pay less on a measured than they would on an unmeasured basis of charging. 55 per cent. of pensioner households would pay less on a measured than unmeasured basis of charging.

(ii) Assuming a measured basis without standing charge: 44 per cent. of households would pay less on a measured than they would on an unmeasured basis of charging. 63 per cent. of pensioner households would pay less on a measured than unmeasured basis of charging.

The Government's policy, reflected in the Water Industry Bill, is that domestic consumers presently charged on an unmeasured basis should have the option of requesting a measured basis of charging. The Bill would also give new rights to customers paying an unmeasured charge, to continue paying on an unmeasured basis on their present homes where they are using water only for essential household use.

Valuation Appeals

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many valuation appeals have been lodged since 11 March 1998 in which the appellant cites the decision in the Benjamin vs Anston Properties Ltd. case. [66511]

Ms Armstrong: A total of some 135,000 proposals to alter the rating list were made during the period 1 April to 31 December 1998. It is not possible to say how many of these proposals will rely on the Lands Tribunal decision in Benjamin vs Anston Properties in support of their proposals.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his oral statement of 11 January 1999, Official Report, column 71, if he will publish the evidence and working papers on which he based his estimate of the number of properties which might be in a sufficient state of disrepair to encourage owners to appeal against their valuation for rating purposes. [66513]

Ms Armstrong: It is not possible to say with any accuracy how many properties are in disrepair at any one time. However, the Valuation Office Agency (VOA) believe that most non-domestic properties will require routine repairs to be carried out within a 3 to 5 year cycle, and it is likely that some properties would not have such work carried out within this normal repair cycle.

The VOA estimate that a maximum of 15 per cent. of the total of 1.7 million non-domestic properties may fall into this category at any one point in time, and that their condition may be such that the occupiers may seek to obtain a reduction in their rate liability as a result.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what information an appellant must supply in order to lodge a valuation appeal. [66512]

Ms Armstrong: The information to be provided in making a proposal to alter the rating list is specified in regulation 5A of the Non-Domestic Rating (Alteration of Lists and Appeals) Regulations 1993 (SI 1993/291 as amended). A proposal should include the name and address of the proposer and the capacity in which he makes the proposal; the identity of the property, and the respects in which it is proposed that the list be altered. The proposal should also include a statement of the grounds on which the proposal is made, although this does not restrict the grounds on which an appeal can be argued at a Valuation Tribunal.

Air Services Agreement

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects negotiations with the United States towards a new air services agreement to be completed; and if he will make a statement. [66640]

Dr. Reid: Negotiation with the US broke off last November. It is not known at this stage when formal negotiations will resume or be completed.

A1 (Tyneside)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which categories of traffic he proposes to ban from the A1 corridor between Lobley Mill and North Brunton, Newcastle; if that ban will extend to the New Tyne Crossing; over what hours the ban will be in force; what alternative routes he proposes; when the ban is to be introduced; and what consultation he proposes to have with local residents and schools that may be affected. [66600]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Nutt to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 19 January 1999:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked Lawrie Haynes, the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question. I am replying in Lawrie's absence from the office. You asked "Which categories of traffic he proposes to ban from the A1 corridor between Lobley Hill and North Brunton, Newcastle; if that ban will extend to the New Tyne Crossing; over what hours the ban will be in force; what alternative routes he proposes; when the ban is to be introduced; and what consultation he proposes to have with local residents and schools that may be affected".

You will know of the considerable peak hour coggestion that occurs on the A1 in Tyneside. It is felt that slow moving vehicles exacerbate this problem and we propose to introduce a ban, by means of an experimental Temporary Traffic Order this Spring.

It is proposed that any vehicle which cannot attain a speed of 30mph on the level in free-flowing conditions will be prohibited from entering the A1 Gateshead and Newcastle Western By-Passes. This will include the sections between Lobley Hill, the Tyne Crossing at Blaydon and North Brunton. The ban, when introduced, will be in force between the hours of 7am to 9am and 4pm to 6pm from Monday to Friday and is expected to be introduced this Spring.

Consultations will be held with local authorities and other representative bodies with the issue or alternative routes being discussed before the ban is introduced. This temporary scheme will be implemented under the powers of an Experimental Traffic Regulation Order. During this time we will monitor the impact on traffic movements and views of any interested individuals or organisations will be welcomed. Any comments received will be taken into account before deciding whether to make the ban permanent.

Clean Development

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the letter of 22 September 1998 (IYR/PSO/16123/98) from the Minister for the Environment to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, if he will give examples of what has been achieved in making progress towards clean development mechanisms under the Kyoto Protocol. [65394]

Mr. Meacher: In Buenos Aires, Parties agreed to give priority to the clean development mechanism (CDM) within the wider work programme on the Kyoto Protocol. The aim is to have all the modalities and procedures established by the sixth Conference of the Parties (COP6—which will probably be in late 2000). The UNFCCC secretariat will convene two technical workshops on the CDM, and the other Kyoto mechanisms, before April of next year.

The EU will submit further proposals on the CDM to the secretariat of the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change by the end of March as input to these workshops.

Air Freight

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has had from Sir Crispin Tickell on comparisons of cost in carrying (a) air freighted vegetables and (b) other air freight between (i) Scotland and London and (ii) Asia/Africa/Caribbean/South America and London. [66495]

Ms Glenda Jackson: None.

World Environment Organisation

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has had from Sir Crispin Tickell on the concept of a World Environment Organisation. [66494]

Mr. Meale: I have not received any direct representations from Sir Crispin Tickell on this matter. I am aware, however, that he has spoken publicly on a number of occasions about such an initiative as a counterweight to the World Trade Organisation.

Greater London Authority

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will announce his decision in respect of the recommendations of the Local Government Commission for the boundaries of the electoral areas for the Assembly of the Greater London Authority. [66596]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government have decided to accept the Commission's recommendations. Subject to the passage of the Greater London Authority Bill as introduced, they will be implemented by secondary legislation after Royal Assent. A copy of the recommendations has been deposited in the Library of the House.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Badger Culling Scheme

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what auditing of the Government's badger culling scheme has been carried out since 2 December; and if he will make a statement. [64837]

Mr. Rooker: Systematic management checks were undertaken in December last year to assess compliance with trial procedures and their uniform application. In addition, members of the Independent Scientific Group, who are monitoring the trial, undertook field visits to check the work.

Coastal Protection

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food by how much in percentage terms (a) the highest rate of grant for coastal defence work and (b) the normal rate of grant have been reduced since 1997. [66042]

Mr. Morley: The rates of grant available to maritime district councils for approved capital coast protection works have remained unchanged at 35 per cent., 45 per cent., 55 per cent., 65 per cent. and 75 per cent. since 1992. The formula used to determine which rate of grant is applicable to specific works was subject to significant change with effect from 1 April 1997, with a view to bringing the direct government contribution to the national programme within the range 50 to 55 per cent. The announcement of that change was made in November 1996 by the previous administration. The only change to the formula since then was an adjustment by 2 per cent, in line with inflation, made with effect from 1 April 1998.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish his proposals for coastal protection co-ordination for the rest of the period covered by the Comprehensive Spending Review. [66040]

Mr. Morley: Coast protection authorities are encouraged to work within the policy framework published in the "Strategy for Flood and Coastal Defence in England and Wales". As confirmed in the response to the Agriculture Select Committee's report on Flood and Coastal Defence, the Government consider there is scope to enhance the effectiveness of the current arrangements, to improve the co-ordination that takes place and to help ensure delivery of the national strategy. This will be achieved by developing the way in which the Environment Agency exercises its current general flood defence supervisory duty and seeking to establish national targets for all operating authorities. These targets will be published in due course.

The Ministry's concept of Shoreline Management Plans and strategic planning was developed to encourage operating authorities to work together, to consider the impact of their schemes on neighbouring authorities and overall to improve decision-making. The first generation of such Plans is now nearing completion, and all should be published by Spring 1999.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will initiate a review of the Halcrow study on coastal defence. [66043]

Mr. Morley: The Ministry commissioned Halcrows, as lead consultants, to produce the "Coast Protection Survey of England"; it was published in 1994. The survey was reviewed in 1995 and 1996, but these updates showed that the rate of change in the state of defences did not warrant such frequent reviews. Action in 1997 was therefore confined to a review of authorities' plans in respect of defences identified as being in most urgent need of repair. Consideration will now be given to the future development of an asset database of all flood and coastal defences irrespective of operating authority.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which Minister is in overall charge of the UK's strategy for meeting the challenge of climate change and sinkage in coastal areas. [66045]

Mr. Morley: Within Government, overall responsibility for climate change rests with my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister. So far as the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is concerned, I oversee policies, including the implications for flood and coastal defence, though my right hon. Friend the Minister has overall policy responsibility.

Animal Transport

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which EU countries have implemented EU directive 95/29/EC on live animal transport; and what representations he has made to those which have not. [65735]

Mr. Morley: By the end of 1998, the majority of Member States had implemented the Directive. The crucial point, with live exports from Great Britain in mind, is enforcement of the rules on the ground. We repeatedly remind the other Member States concerned of their responsibilities in this respect.

Animal Exports

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) live sheep and (b) live pigs were exported from (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) the port of Dover in 1998 for (1) slaughter, (2) further fattening and (3) breeding; and how many (x) live sheep and (y) live pigs in each of these categories were exported to each individual country of destination. [65787]

Mr. Rooker: The information requested by my hon. Friend will take some time to put together. With his permission, I will write to him once it is available.

Fisheries

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the prospects for decentralising the control of fisheries to zonal management committees within EU member states. [66408]

Mr. Morley: Zonal management committees are one of the ideas being examined by the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations and the Scottish Fishermen's Federation. The Federations have been assessing their ideas with their counterparts in other Member States and I shall be interested to see the outcome of these contacts.

Abattoirs (Inspection Charges)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect of increased inspection charges on small abattoirs. [66158]

Mr. Rooker: The Government recognise that increases in veterinary supervision levels in small abattoirs will have significant cost implications for their operators, and we have received many representations on this issue. The impact on individual premises will depend on the circumstances prevailing at those premises, including the current level of veterinary supervision, the size and throughput of the premises, the complexity and standard of hygiene of operations, and the type of animal being slaughtered. We continue to keep the matter under review and, bearing in mind our EU legal obligations, to seek to minimise the impact on abattoir operators wherever possible.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Credit Unions

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what action her Department is taking to support the development of credit unions; and if she will make a statement. [66617]

Clare Short: We are currently involved in a number of projects setting up and strengthening credit unions and self-help groups which provide financial and other services to their members and share the co-operative principles of user-management and mutual-ownership. These range from comparatively small organisations aiming to build the financial asset base of disadvantaged communities in a specific location to self-help group federations and co-operative banks serving large parts of the countries they operate in.

Some examples of current and planned activities include:

In Kenya we are currently preparing a project to assist a number of indigenous savings and credit co-operatives (SACCOs). The main focus will be on improving their accounting and management information systems with a view to enhancing the efficiency and effectiveness of their work.

In India we are helping to set up the Andhra Pradesh Women's Fund (APWF) which will be owned by member clusters of self-help groups throughout the state of Andhra Pradesh. APWF will provide loans to these member clusters as well as help to mobilise and maintain the quality of clusters joining the APWF.

Through our active involvement with the Consultative Group to Assist the Poorest (CGAP), we are providing support for the establishment of an independent rating agency to supervise select Guatemalan credit unions.

Finally, we are sponsoring practitioners from developing countries to participate in the postgraduate certificate in co-operative management and organisational development of a credit union being offered by Leicester University.

We will continue to look at new ways to support credit unions and self-help groups which aim to offer the poor improved access to financial services.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Animated Films

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many animated films were produced in the UK in each year for the past five years; and what was the total level of grants provided for UK-produced animations in each of those years. [65990]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 18 January 1999]: Figures on the numbers of animation films produced in the UK are not available.

Last year's Government/industry Film Policy Review identified the need to improve the coverage and availability of statistical information on the British film industry. My Department is currently exploring the feasibility of establishing a new and more comprehenaive survey of film businesses.

National Lottery film production awards have been available since 1995. Awards to animated films were as follows:

Year	£
1998	516,695
1997	613,330
1995	66,441

In addition, the Arts Council of England contributes £50,000 per annum to a scheme for experimental animation, which it runs in conjunction with Channel 4. The British Film Institute also provides support to regional film and media bodies whose activities in some cases include support for animation.

Hotels (Quality Rating)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions his Department has held on the establishment of a new quality rating system for hotels. [65987]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 18 January 1999]: With the support of this Department, a new harmonised accommodation rating scheme for hotels and guest accommodation was launched by the English Tourist Board, the AA and the RAC last year. Hotels are given a rating of 1 to 5 stars covering the whole visitor experience and Guest Accommodation is rated entirely on quality, using 1 to 5 diamonds. Inspections against the new standards began in January 1998 and the scheme will be launched to customers later this year. It will be included in Guide Books for 2000. The scheme is available through the AA and the RAC throughout the United Kingdom.

S4C

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he has taken to ensure political balance on the Board of S4C. [66062]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 18 January 1999]: All public appointments for which my right hon. Friend is responsible are made on the basis of aptitude and merit, and not on the basis of political affiliation. Under the Broadcasting Act 1990, S4C is required to ensure that due impartiality is preserved in respect of matters of political controversy or relating to current public policy.

Television Licence (Pensioners)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to review the TV licence scheme in respect of the different rates paid by different pensioners; and if he will make a statement. [66253]

Janet Anderson: The current review of BBC funding will include a detailed consideration of the structure of the concessionary television licence scheme and whether a suitable alternative structure could be available. The review panel will report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State by the end of July, after which we shall consult publicly on its findings.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mr. Nick Mullen

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Attorney-General what were the main points of his submission made to the High Court concerning the seizure and arrest of Mr. Nick Mullen in Zimbabwe in 1989; and if he will place a copy of the submission in the Library. [65996]

The Attorney-General: Nicholas Mullen was convicted at the Central Criminal Court on 9 June 1990 of conspiracy to cause explosions and sentenced to 30 years imprisonment. He did not appeal against his conviction at that stage but, on 29 January 1998, obtained leave from the Court of Appeal to appeal against his conviction out of time. Although the consent of the then Attorney-General was required for the institution of the proceedings against Mullen, neither I nor my predecessors have been a party to the criminal proceedings which have been conducted by the Director of Public Prosecutions. There have been no proceedings in the High Court. The appeal is at present the subject of consideration by the Court of Appeal (Criminal Division) which has heard argument and reserved judgment. The transcripts of the trial may be obtained, in accordance with usual procedures, from the official shorthand writers. It would not be appropriate for me to make any further observations in relation to a case currently under consideration by the court.

Commercial Lobbyists

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Attorney-General what rules or guidance his Department has to govern the (a) formal and (b) informal interaction between his civil servants and commercial lobbyists. [66210]

The Attorney-General: Any contact between officials in my Department and people outside Government, including lobbyists, would be governed by the principles set out in the guidance issued by the Prime Minister in July 1998, as set out in the answer given by him on 27 July 1998, Official Report, column 4, in response to my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice).

DEFENCE

Clyde Naval Base

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total annual cost of providing harbour craft services, including those sub-contracted, at HM Naval Base Clyde. [66598]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 19 January 1999]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Naval Bases and Supply Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Trewby to Mrs. Margaret Ewing, dated 20 January 1999:

The Secretary of State for Defence has asked me to reply to your Question about the total annual cost of providing harbour craft services, including those sub-contracted, at HM Naval Base Clyde as this falls within my area of responsibility.

The provision of all the Marine Services at HM Naval Base Clyde is undertaken by a commercial contractor, Serco Denholm Ltd. I regret that I am unable to disclose the cost of these services as it is commercially sensitive.

Export Licences

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what military or dual use goods have been exported since 1 May 1997 under Government-to-Government deals without export licence. [66241]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 19 January 1999]: Since May 1997, the UK has exported the following equipment under the terms of government-to-government agreements with the Governments of Saudi Arabia and Kuwait:

Kuwait

Warrior vehicles, Starburst missiles and launchers, including spare parts; special tools and test equipment; technical publications; and general workshop tools.

Saudi Arabia

Tornado and Hawk aircraft; Minehunters with associated armaments; and support equipment, including spares.

Additionally, for disposals of surplus MOD equipment, the MOD Disposal Sales Agency requires overseas governments which purchase surplus MOD equipment to obtain a UK export licence before collection of equipment from the UK. There has been one exception to this practice since May 1997. This was in relation to the supply of three ex Royal Navy Peacock Class patrol craft, which were delivered to the Philippine Government from their base in Hong Kong.

Territorial Army

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will re-assess the number of TA centres to remain open in South Lancashire. [65028]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I am content that our decision that all TA Centres in Lancashire, bar Chorley, should remain open, was sound.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what account he took of the proportion of the strength of the TA which will remain after implementation of the Strategic Defence Review in (a) the North West of England and (b) North Wales, in his decision to transfer HQ 101 Battalion REME from Chorley to Queensferry. [65024]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The regional distribution of reductions in the TA was one of a number of factors taken into account in reaching decisions on the future TA structure, but, in view of the small numbers involved in this case, was not a major factor in the decision to transfer Headquarters 101 Battalion REME to Queensferry.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many new full-time jobs will be created in Queensferry as a consequence of the transfer of HQ 101 Battalion REME from Chorley to Queensferry. [65026]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This will depend on staffing arrangements that have yet to be confirmed.

Ships

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the forecast service life for (a) Project Horizon and (b) Type 22 ships. [65729]

Mr. Spellar: The planned service life for the Common New Generation Frigate (CNGF) is a minimum of 25 years. The reduction in the size of our destroyer and frigate force from 35 to 32, as announced in the Strategic Defence Review White Paper, will be achieved by paying off the Type 22 frigates HMS Boxer, Beaver and London in 1999. HMS Brave will be replaced by a new Type 23 frigate in 2000 as will HMS Coventry in 2001. The remaining five Type 22 frigates have a planned service life of approximately 23 years.

Rosyth

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how frequently radiation surveys are undertaken at the entrance to reactor compartments during work on nuclear submarines at Rosyth dockyard; [65726]

(2) what proportion of supervisors in the Health Physics Section at Rosyth dockyard are qualified to City & Guilds Part 1 Radiation and Safety Practice standards; [65727]

(3) what instruments are used to monitor personnel leaving the reactor compartments of nuclear submarines at Rosyth dockyard. [65737]

Mr. Spellar: All nuclear safety issues relating to Rosyth Royal Dockyard are a matter for Babcock Rosyth Defence Limited, the owners of the Dockyard. It is a condition of their contract with the MOD that they must comply with all nuclear safety regulations.

Submarines

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the forecast hull life of the (a) Astute and (b) Vanguard class of submarines. [65738]

Mr. Spellar: On current plans, both classes have an estimated hull life of 25 years.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the anticipated reactor life of the (a) Astute and (b) Swiftsure class of submarines. [65741]

Mr. Spellar: The reactor plant to be fitted to the Astute class, and reactor plant fitted to the Swiftsure class, are anticipated to last the life of the submarines.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the displacement of the (a) Swiftsure and (b) Trafalgar class of submarines. [65740]

Mr. Spellar: The displacement of Swiftsure submarines, when submerged, is approximately 4,980 tons and of Trafalgar Class submarines, about 5,050 tons.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the forecast reactor life of the Trafalgar class of submarines. [66173]

Mr. Spellar: The reactor plant fitted to the Trafalgar class is designed to last the life of the submarines.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the forecast hull life of the Swiftsure class of submarines. [66166]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The initial design life of Swiftsure class submarine hulls was 25 years, although there is sufficient margin to extend the life of the submarines as necessary, subject to monitoring to ensure the continuing safety of the submarines.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the anticipated reactor life of the Vanguard class of submarines. [66668]

Mr. Spellar: The reactor plant fitted to the Vanguard class is designed to last the life of the submarines.

Young Service Personnel (Disciplinary Proceedings)

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel under 18 years of age have been court-martialled in the last 10 years. [66223]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The information we have available covers the period 1987–1996. Within that period, a total of 19 personnel under the age of 18 years have been convicted by a court-martial. In addition, two RN personnel convicted by a court-martial were charged when under 18 but had reached the age of 18 by the date of their trial.

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel under 18 years of age are currently detained for breaches of contract or discipline at the Military Correctional Training Centre, Colchester. [66222]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Only one solider under the age of 18 years is currently being held at the Military Corrective Training Centre, Colchester. That soldier is nearing the end of his period of detention following a sentence of 60 days for being Absent Without Leave.

RN Base Faslane

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what instruments are used to monitor personnel leaving the reactor compartments of nuclear submarines at RN Base Faslane. [66176]

Mr. Spellar: Personnel leaving the reactor compartment of a nuclear submarine at HM Naval Base Clyde are monitored with an NE Technology Mk10 ratemeter connected to either a BP4 of BP10 probe.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how frequently radiation surveys are undertaken at the entrance to reactor compartments during work on nuclear submarines at RN Base Faslane. [66174]

Mr. Spellar: Radiation surveys of the reactor compartment are carried out daily while work is being undertaken. This includes all compartment entrances and the tunnel area. In addition, other more localised radiation surveys are performed in the vicinity of work areas.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of supervisors in the Health Physics Section at RN Base Faslane are qualified to City and Guilds Part 1 Radiation and Safety Practice standards. [66175]

Mr. Spellar: All supervisors working within the Health Physics Group at HM Naval Base Clyde are qualified to both City and Guilds Part 1 and 2 in Radiation and Safety Practice standards.

Harrier Aircraft

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the forecast service life of Harrier GR7 aircraft engines. [66160]

Mr. Spellar: The Harrier GR7 aircraft entered RAF service in 1987. On current plans, the Harrier GR7 fleet, including the engines, will achieve a service life of some 30 years.

The Harrier GR7 is fitted with the Pegasus Mark 105 engine. Each of the engine's component parts has an approved life and may be replaced during the life of the whole engine in accordance with established maintenance policy.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many technical support personnel are required to support the deployment away from existing RAF bases of flights of (a) four and (b) eight RAF Harrier aircraft. [66669]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The number of technical support personnel deployed to support four or eight RAF Harrier aircraft is dependent on several factors, including the operational requirements, the flying task, the number of hours to be worked in any one day and the amount of support available from the Host Nation. However, a flight of four or eight aircraft would be likely to generate a minimum of 79 and 128 technical support personnel respectively.

Type 23 Ships

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the forecast service life for Type 23 ships. [66168]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The forecast service life for Type 23 frigates is in excess of 18 years and varies for individual vessels in the class.

Tornado GR4 Aircraft

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the forecast service life of Tornado GR4 aircraft airframes. [66170]

Mr. Spellar: The Tornado GR4 entered RAF service in 1997. On current plans, the Tornado GR4 fleet will achieve a service life of some 25 years.

Christmas Island Nuclear Tests

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state his policy in respect of the application by Fijian veterans for compensation for the effects on their health of their exposure to atmospheric nuclear tests on Christmas Island. [66428]

Mr. Spellar: My Department has not received any claims for compensation from Fijian veterans. At the time of the tests, precautions were taken to safeguard the health of those in the area. The effectiveness of these precautions is borne out by independent studies of the health of British nuclear test veterans undertaken by the National Radiological Protection Board and Imperial Cancer Research Fund, which found no evidence of excessive illness or mortality among the veterans as a group which could be linked to their participation in the tests or to exposure to radiation as a result of the tests.

Vessel Running Costs

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are (a) the running costs averaged over a four year period, excluding costs attributable to refits, DEDs, or manning and (b) the current estimates for an average refit and DED of a (i) Type 23 frigate, (ii) Type 22 (Batch 3) frigate, (iii) Sandown class SRMH, (iv) Hunt Class MCMV, (v) Island Class patrol vessel, (vi) Archer Class training vessel, (vii) Castle Class patrol vessel, (viii) Landing Ship-Logistic (LSL), (ix) Bulldog Class survey vessel, (x) Projected CNGF, (xi) Impulse Class tug and (xii) (ARMY) ramped landing craft. [66597]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 19 January 1999]: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Type 42 Ships

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average time between major refits for Type 42 ships. [66169]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Typically, the average time between major refits for RN Frigates and Destroyers is in excess of seven years.

HMS Illustrious

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the interval between major refits for HMS Illustrious. [66167]

Mr. Doug Henderson: HMS Illustrious has undergone one refit. It took place some nine years after she entered service with the Royal Navy.

Nuclear Test Site (Nevada)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to establish whether any plutonium that has recently migrated through the groundwater from the nuclear test site in Nevada came from the underground detonation of British nuclear warheads. [66432]

Mr. Spellar: No.

Submarines and Fishing Boats

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to write to the hon. Member for Greenock and Inverclyde further to his statement in the House of 12 November 1998, Official Report, column 506. [66359]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I expect to write to my hon. Friend shortly. A copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Firing Ranges, Dartmoor

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the advertised days and actual number of days on which Army firing took place within each of the three firing ranges in the Dartmoor National Park for the year ended 31 December 1998. [66116]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The advertised and actual number of days on which Army firing took place within each of the three firing ranges in the Dartmoor National Park for the year ended 31 December 1998 is as follows:

	Advertised	Actual
Okehampton Range	77	51
Willsworthy Range	202	147
Merrivale Range	150	84

El Shifa Factory, Khartoum

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make available the independent evidence which he stated the UK had that the El Shifa factory in Khartoum was making chemical or biological weapons before the US air strike. [65661]

Mr. George Robertson: I am withholding details of the intelligence in our possession regarding the El Shifa factory, under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice for Access to Government Information.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

National Biotechnology Conference

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will produce a response to the National Biotechnology Conference held in March 1997. [64965]

Mr. Meacher: The Government response to the National Biotechnology Conference is available today. The Government have undertaken to examine ways of making more information available to the public about how decisions on biotechnology applications are reached; to ensure that membership of the Advisory Committees reflects a wide range of opinion; to address the wider implications for the natural environment of the introduction of genetically modified crops and to establish procedures for monitoring products when they enter the market. Copies of the response have been placed in the Library.

Waste Oils

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment he has made of the latest draft of the proposed Used Oil Directive; [65894]

(2) how much of the waste oils produced in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the European Union are (i) recovered and recycled and (ii) burnt as fuel, as (1) a quantity and (2) a percentage in each case; [65893]

(3) what assessment he has made of the environmental impact of burning waste oil; [65891]

(4) what assessment he has made of the potential for recycling waste oils. [65892]

Mr. Meale: No reliable, recent figures of waste oil recovery and recycling are available for the United Kingdom. My officials have confirmed with the European Commission that no recent figures have been published for the European Union. The United Kingdom, along with other EU member states, is currently compiling information on waste oil for the European Commission. It is understood that the consolidated report will be available from the Commission at the end of June.

My Department has not carried out any recent studies of the environmental impact of burning waste oils. However, in carrying out its regulatory functions under the Integrated Pollution Control (IPC) provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, the Environment Agency assesses applications according to the statutory requirements of Best Practicable Environmental Option (BPEO) and Best Available Technique Not Entailing Excessive Cost (BATNEEC) as defined in Part 1 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. On the basis of environmental analyses of the small number of cases involving waste oils, the Agency has concluded that this process did not adversely affect the environment.

My officials have confirmed with the European Commission that no draft of the proposed Used Oil Directive has been issued.

At this stage, no assessment has been made of the potential for recycling waste oils.

Environmental Management

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures his Department is taking to promote the uptake of the environmental management systems ISO14001 and Eco-Management and Audit Scheme (EMAS). [66626]

Mr. Meale: The Government fully support and promote the use of environmental management systems and promote the EU Eco-Management and Audit Scheme (EMAS) alongside the international standard for environmental management systems (ISO 14001) as complementary means for business to continuously improve performance.

My Department has produced and made available free of charge a full range of introductory leaflets, guides, case study material and videos to encourage business and local authorities to participate in EMAS. These are now all available from the Institute of Environmental Assessment, who I appointed last year to succeed my Department in administering the scheme. EMAS and ISO 14001 are both promoted by my Department and by the IEA at exhibitions and conferences. We are also funding separate promotional efforts by the IEA which is planning to establish a dedicated EMAS website.

My Department is currently working with the Transport and General Workers Union on an EMAS Handbook to help all employees to understand and implement environmental management systems. Last November we set up a new environment and energy helpline to provide guidance for small and medium firms on how good environmental performance can help their businesses.

EMAS and ISO 14001 were also featured in the Government's recent consultation paper on "Sustainable Business", part of the wider consultation on sustainable development. My Department has been fully involved in the current revision of the EMAS Regulation and in pressing for changes, including the incorporation of key elements of ISO 14001, to further enhance its attractiveness to business. Seeking views from business and other interested parties about the proposed changes has provided a further opportunity to raise awareness of EMAS and indirectly of ISO 14001.

Solar Design

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action his Department is taking to improve the passive solar design of buildings; and if he will make a statement. [66621]

Mr. Meale: Under my Department's Energy Efficiency Best Practice programme we promote the application of passive solar design principles alongside energy efficiency measures as part of an integrated approach to low energy building design. Also, we encourage the consideration of passive solar design in specific buildings through Design Advice Services operated by BRECSU under the same programme.

Waste Water Treatment

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will announce the date by which secondary treatment of waste water and sewage will be required under the terms of the European Union's Urban Waste Water Treatment Directive; and if he will make a statement. [66349]

Mr. Meale: Under the Urban Waste Water Treatment Directive, secondary treatment must be provided by 31 December 2000 for sewage discharges above 15,000 population equivalent to inland, estuarial and coastal waters. Discharges to inland and estuarial waters of between 2,000 and 15,000 population equivalent, and discharges of between 10,000 and 15,000 population equivalent to coastal waters must receive secondary treatment by 31 December 2005.

In the case of coastal discharges which were formerly potentially subject to derogations to a lower level of treatment, we are encouraging water and sewerage companies to make as rapid a progress as possible with the installation of secondary treatment.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 14 January 1999, Official Report, column 246, if he will place in the Library details of the current millennium compliance status of the organisations currently approved by the CAA; what percentage of these are fully millennium-compliant; and if he will make a statement. [66646]

Dr. Reid: No. It is not possible to provide information in this detail. The Civil Aviation Authority currently authorises over 2,000 aviation related organisations. These organisations cover all aspects of the UK civil air transport system form airlines to manufacturers and air traffic service providers. All these organisations are engaged in their own individual compliance programmes which involves them in each checking with suppliers who may number from tens to hundreds. These compliance programmes are being assessed by the CAA. Once this assessment is complete, which is expected to be during the third quarter of 1999, the CAA will make a statement about the Y2k readiness of the UK civil air transport system.

As far as National Air Traffic Services (NATS) are concerned, they are in the final stages of their system compliance programme. Only 10 systems out of a total of 700 still require remedial work and NATS expects to reach full systems ready status for the new millennium on or before the end of March 1999.

Mobile Homes

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what planning guidance he has issued in relation to mobile homes, with particular regard to all-year round occupancy; and if he will make a statement. [66254]

Mr. Raynsford: Planning Policy Guidance note 21 on Tourism gives guidance on holiday and touring caravans, including the seasonal and holiday occupancy conditions.

Parish Councils

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with parish councils regarding the impact of the increased audit requirements and subsequent costs on smaller parish councils; and if he will make a statement. [66261]

Ms Armstrong: The Chairman of the National Association of Local Councils (NALC) and his colleagues discussed with me the cost of parish audits when I met them on 16 December. As I explained to them, it is essential for parish councils, as for all councils, to have an effective audit regime ensuring propriety and regularity in their affairs. We have no plans to review the current parish audit arrangements, which were introduced in April 1997, although we do keep these matters under review.

Wild Birds Directive

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to incorporate directive 97/49/EU into UK law; and if he will make a statement. [66252]

Mr. Meale: No changes are required to UK law as a result of Directive 97/49/EC.

Advance Corporation Tax

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what funds he intends to make available (a) nationally, (b) to Gloucestershire County Council and (c) to Tewkesbury Borough Council to compensate for the removal of ACT credit in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [66255]

Ms Armstrong: In the provisional Local Government Finance Settlement for 1999–2000, the Government specifically took account of the best estimate of £130 million available to them and the Local Government Association to provide for the effects of the abolition of ACT on the local government pension scheme.

It is not possible to identify how much has been provided at a local level. Local authorities receive Revenue Support Grant (RSG) on the basis of their Standard Spending Assessment (SSA). SSAs are calculated using information reflecting the demographic, physical and social characteristics of each area and are intended to reflect the relative costs of providing comparable services between different authorities. RSG makes up the difference between an authority's SSA and the income it can expect to receive from both re-distributed non-domestic rates and from a standard council tax. RSG is not hypothecated to particular services or for particular purposes.

Dial-a-bus Services

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what representations he has received concerning the extension of fuel duty rebate to dial-a-bus services; what assistance is currently available to (a) rural and (b) urban dial-a-bus services; and if he will make a statement; [66606]

(2) what plans he has to extend the eligibility criteria for fuel duty rebate to dial-a-bus services. [66605]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have no present plans to extend the eligibility of bus fuel duty rebate beyond those services which (amongst other criteria) are available to the general public and are registered with the Traffic Commissioner as a local bus service.

We have received a number of representations on this matter, which has also been recently raised in the review of voluntary transport that my Department commissioned last year. We expect to receive the report on that review shortly and will be considering its recommendations carefully.

Support for both urban and rural dial-a-bus services is primarily a matter for each local authority to decide in the light of its overall spending priorities and the resources available to it. Additional support for specific rural community transport projects, including dial-a-bus services, is available as part of the Government's new funding for rural transport, announced in the last Budget, of £50 million a year, of which Scotland's share is £4.5 million a year.

London Transport

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress he has made with his proposed restructuring of the Board of London Transport. [67091]

Mr. Prescott: I have today appointed Sir Malcolm Bates as non-executive Chairman of London Transport. He will take up his post on 15 February. This appointment is excellent news for London Transport. With Denis Tunnicliffe as Chief Executive and Derek Smith taking up post shortly as Managing Director of London Underground, we have now given LT the senior management structure it needs to address the challenging agenda we have set.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disabled People

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set up a national information service on equipment for people with disabilities. [65433]

Mr. Hutton: I have been asked to reply.

The Department is providing funding to the Disabled Living Foundation and the Royal National Institute for the Blind to help them improve their databases on disability equipment and transfer these to the Internet. The Disabled Living Foundation also operates a telephone helpline for disabled people.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has for a disablement services authority with a brief to set standards and monitor the standard of equipment provision for people with disabilities. [65434]

Mr. Hutton: I have been asked to reply.

We have no plans to develop proposals on a disablement services authority at present. However we are examining a range of mechanisms to help ensure consistent access to services and quality of care.

Employees

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate, on the basis of the Family Resources Survey, and pooling years of data, the number of benefit units which contain at least one employee whose net earnings is in each £5,000 band up to £30,000 and above, indicating separately the figures for (i) lone parent families, (ii) two parent families with one child, (iii) two parent families with two children and (iv) two parent families with three or more children, providing within each category separate figures for those in (a) firms of up to 25 employees and (b) firms of 25 employees or more. [64780]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the tables.

Number of two parent family benefit units with at least one employee by number of dependent children and number of employees in the local unit of the firm by which they are employed (excluding those benefit units where at least one member is either full or part-time self-employed—Average of period 1994–95 to 1996–97

25+	90	110	70	30	10	*	*

Notes:

1. All figures are estimates and are taken from the Households Below Average Income (HBAI) data set based on the Family Resources Survey (FRS). The FRS does not include Northern Ireland.
2. Only benefit units with at least one employee were considered when answering this question. Benefit units containing at least one person who was either fully or part-time self-employed were excluded.
3. The income bands in the tables relate to the total net earnings of the benefit unit as opposed to the individual.
4. The definition of employment used is: "whether the individual was employed and at work, or employed but away from work, in the last week".
5. Where both members of a couple are employed, the value taken for the number of employees in the local unit of the firm was that for the head of the benefit unit, unless they were not working, in which case that for the spouse was assumed instead.
6. The concept of the number of employees in the local unit of a firm used in answering this question is different from the usual definition of a small firm (ie the number of employees of the enterprise as a whole, across all local units) which is not available from the FRS. Given this fact, in conjunction with the use of the net earnings (as defined for HBAI) rather than assessable income (as defined for the proposed Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC)), it is advised that it would not be considered appropriate to use the data supplied in any analysis of the administration of the WFTC. The exclusion of all benefit units containing the self-employed would also have a bearing on this issue.
7. The figures given are rounded to the nearest 5,000 benefit units. The entries marked "*" have values of less than 2,000.
8. To provide more robust estimates at such a fine level of detail, the HBAI data set was pooled over three financial years, from April 1994—March 1997.
9. As the FRS does not actually collect annual earnings data from individuals, this figure was estimated from weekly earnings data. As the earnings data collected relates solely to the last pay-cheque received, it will not take into account any bonuses, pay-rises or changes of employment that may take/have taken place at other points in the year.
10. The earnings bands were taken to be in April 1998 prices, and all earnings data from each of the financial years used was uprated accordingly, to April 1998 prices, using the Retail Prices Index (RPI).

Widows

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what estimate he has made of the number of widows who will receive reduced benefit payments following the implementation of his reform proposals; [66352]

(2) what category of widows who submit their claims under the new rules will receive reduced benefit under his reform proposals. [66262]

Angela Eagle: Following implementation of the proposals, widows and widowers aged over 45 when they are widowed and who are not entitled to Widowed Parent's Allowance will be able to claim Bereavement Allowance, which will be payable for up to six months.

In the first full year following implementation, it is estimated that, at any one time, the average number of widows and widowers entitled to the Bereavement Allowance, which will end after 6 months, will be 20,000.

Notes:

1. Numbers of widows and widowers have been supplied by the Government Actuary's Department.
2. Numbers are rounded to the nearest 10,000.
3. These estimates are intended to represent broad orders of magnitude.

Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the effect would be of an immediate increase in the age addition to the basic state pension to (a) £5 for the over 80s, (b) £5 for the over 80s and £3 for the over 75s and (c) £10 for the over 80s and £5 for the over 75s, on the number of pensioners receiving income support in (i) 1999–2000 and (ii) 2000–01. [65422]

Mr. Timms: The information is in the table.

Reduction in the number of pensioner benefit units receiving income support with the proposed age additions

	1999–2000	2000–01
£5 to 80+s	–40,000	–40,000
£3 to 75–79s, £5 to 80+s	–50,000	–60,000
£5 to 75–79s, £10 to over 80+s	–140,000	–160,000

Notes:

1. Estimates are based on the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey and the Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiry.
2. Estimates are rounded to the nearest 10,000 and provide broad orders of magnitude.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the combined value of the basic pension and the proposed second state pension as a proportion of average earnings once the new scheme has fully matured, for someone with annual earnings of (a) £4,500, (b) £9,000, (c) £13,500, (d) £18,000 and (e) £22,500. [65426]

Mr. Timms: The information is in the table.

Combined value of basic state pension and state second pension as a proportion of national average earnings in retirement

4,500	21
9,000	21
13,500	23
18,000	25
22,500	26

Notes:

1. Results are presented for a person who begins work at age 16 in 2002; earns the amounts specified (in 1998 earnings terms) throughout their working life; retires at age 65 in 2051.
2. Real average earnings are assumed to grow at 1.5 per cent. per annum.
3. 1998 national average earnings are taken from the New Earnings Survey 1998 as average gross weekly earnings for full-time employees on adult rates whose pay was not affected by absence during the survey pay-period.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his policy on whether (a) lump sums paid as part of pensions on retirement and (b) capital sums held as part of approved personal plans before annuitisation will be subject under the minimum pensions guarantee to the savings limits and tariff income schedule regimes of existing income support; [66454]

(2) if the capital resources assessment rules accompanying the minimum pension guarantee have been decided; and which existing income support capital resources rules will be revised. [66455]

Mr. Timms: Initially, the rules governing the treatment of resources will remain unchanged. However, in "Partnership in Pensions" we made it clear that we will examine ways of amending the rules to reward better those who have saved for their retirement. We hope to bring forward proposals later in this Parliament.

Appeals Tribunals

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what consultation was conducted prior to introducing the change in the composition of social security appeals tribunals hearing all-work test appeals; and if he will make a statement; [65583]

(2) what is the reason for the recent review of the composition of social security appeals tribunals hearing all-work test appeals; [65582]

(3) how many representations his Department has received (a) in favour of and (b) in total on the review of the composition of social security appeals tribunals hearing all-work test appeals; and if he will make a statement. [65584]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) on 29 October 1998, Official Report, column 266. The recent change to the composition of Social Security Appeal Tribunals (SSATs) hearing All Work Test Appeals was the second phase of measures introduced by His Honour Judge Harris, the President of the Independent Tribunal Services under transitory powers afforded to him by Schedule 6 of the Social Security Act 1998.

This provision was introduced to give the President flexibility over the composition of SSATs during a period of substantial change in 1999. The President wanted to be able to monitor the effect of change before regulations varying the composition of tribunals are debated in Parliament. The President consulted widely within his organisation. The decision to introduce the change is a judicial matter.

The President's initial monitoring of the changes indicates that the new flexibility appears to be working well. Tribunal Chairmen, operating the new arrangements, are reporting overall improvements in service as a result of the change. There is no evidence to suggest that the percentage of appeals upheld has been affected by the introduction of the new arrangements. The Department has not received any representations from appellants who have had their appeals decided by a legally qualified panel member supported by a medical assessor. These are initial results and monitoring is continuing.

We are firmly committed to tackling the unacceptable delays in the appeals service—currently averaging seven months, with some appellants waiting over a year for the decision on their case. The flexibility to tailor the composition and expertise of the Tribunal to the issues raised by an appeal will provide appellants with good quality decisions, quicker.

Regulations varying tribunal composition under Section 7 of the Social Security Act 1998 will be debated shortly under affirmative procedures. Draft regulations are being discussed with the Independent Tribunal Service, the Council of Tribunals, the Office of the Social Security Commissioners and an ad hoc group of representative bodies including the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux and the Child Poverty Action Group.

Lone Parents

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each quarter since May 1997 the number of lone parents claiming income support; and if he will estimate the number of lone parents who will be claiming income support for each of the next four quarters. [65767]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

	Number
Published[1]
May 1997	1,014,000
August 1997	1,012,000
November 1997	982,000

May 1998	961,000
Forecast[2]
August 1998	957,000
November 1998	933,000
February 1999	927,000
May 1999	918,000
August 1999	919,000
November 1999	895,000

[1] Figures are based on a 5 per cent. sample and as such are subject to a degree of sampling error.

[2] Figures are consistent with forecasts produced for the pre-budget report and are estimates of the number of lone parents that will be shown in future quarterly Statistical Enquiries.

Note:

Lone parents are defined as those single people with dependants who are not in receipt of a disability or pensioner premium. Figures are rounded to the nearest thousand.

Prepayment Gas Meters

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the percentage of people receiving income support who pay their gas costs with prepayment meters. [65969]

Angela Eagle: We estimate that 24 per cent. of households receiving Income Support pay for gas with prepayment meters.

Notes:

1. This figure is an estimate taken from the 1997–98 Family Expenditure Survey for Great Britain.

2. This estimate will include households who do not use gas at all.

3. "Households receiving Income Support" means that the household contains at least one person receiving Income Support.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to amend the Social Security (Overlapping Benefits) Regulations 1979 to mitigate their impact on recipients of invalid care allowance who lose their benefit on reaching retirement age. [66351]

Mr. Bayley: It is a basic principle of the Social Security system that only one benefit at a time can be paid for income maintenance. Retirement Pension is an income replacement benefit for those who have reached pensionable age. It replaces Invalid Care Allowance at pension age. Invalid Care Allowance provides a measure of financial support to those who give up the opportunity of full-time paid employment to care for a severely disabled person. It is not an "extra-costs" benefit. To pay both benefits in full therefore would duplicate provision for the same need. There are no plans to change these arrangements.

Benefits Agency (Computers)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how the £7 billion project for computers in the Benefits Agency is to be phased; what payback period is expected; and if he will make a statement. [66251]

Mr. Timms: The ACCORD project, announced on 5 November 1998, will deliver the next generation of computer systems fit to support a modernised Welfare State.

The Department is currently working with the preferred supplier, Affinity, on the development of a plan for the implementation of new Information Systems/Information Technology (IS/IT) which is expected to start with delivery of systems for Income Support and Child Support early in 2001. Negotiations on the costs of the new service have not yet been concluded.

Industrial Injuries Scheme

Mr. Ivan Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions he plans to have with relevant representative groups about the future of the industrial injuries scheme. [67200]

Mr. Darling: As part of our wider programme of Welfare Reform, we have been examining the scope for modernisation of the Industrial Injuries scheme. The scheme provides no-fault compensation benefits for those injured at, or suffering a disease caused by work, and was designed over 50 years ago for a very different social and industrial climate.

The Government's aim is to provide better protection from the risks and consequences of occupational disablement for the workforce of the future. We have asked officials to explore with the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council, industry, trades unions and other key representative groups whether there are alternative replacement no-fault compensation arrangements which would meet those objectives.

WALES

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate his Department has made of the number of young people against whom sanctions have been taken for failure to comply with the New Deal. [64745]

Mr. Hain: Up until the end of October 1998, out of a total of some 12,000 young people who entered the New Deal Gateway in Wales, 95 young people have been sanctioned because, without good cause, they failed or refused to start a New Deal option or left an option early, or because they were dismissed from a New Deal option due to misconduct.

Bus Services

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he is taking to improve bus services in (a) urban and (b) rural areas, with particular reference to Flintshire. [66410]

Mr. Hain: For 1999–2000, I am making £5 million available to local authorities to support local bus services, of which at least £3 million must be spent on rural services with the remainder for urban services. This grant is in addition to the provision which local authorities make in their own budgets for subsidised services. All authorities in Wales, including Flintshire, will receive a share of this money. I am currently consulting on the precise method of allocating funds to authorities, and will announce the individual allocations shortly.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he proposes to help senior citizens to use buses; and if he will make a statement. [66419]

Mr. Hain: From April, I expect all local authorities in Wales to be operating concessionary travel schemes for pensioners which at least meet the Government's proposed minimum standard of a maximum of £5 for a bus pass and a minimum discount of 50 per cent. on bus fares. In addition, I have announced that we intend to provide free concessionary bus travel for pensioners over the next two to three years.

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his policy concerning the building of combined heat and power stations. [66409]

Mr. Hain: As in the recent consent approved for Shotton, combined heat and power projects can offer environmental benefits and should play an important role in ensuring the availability of sustainable energy supplies. Full details of the Government's policy on building such schemes, in England and Wales, is set out in the White Paper (Cm 4071) entitled "Conclusions of the Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation", which was published on 8 October 1998.

HEALTH

Waiting Lists

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set up an inquiry into the impact of private medical practice on NHS waiting lists under the terms recommended by the Health Committee. [63259]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 16 December 1998]: We have no plans to set up an inquiry of the sort recommended by the Health Select Committee 8 years ago.

Live Births

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, for each of the last 10 years, the total number of live births in the United Kingdom, and the percentage of those births delivered by caesarean section. [66264]

Mr. Hutton: The information currently available on the number of live births and the percentage of births delivered by caesarean section is shown in the tables.

Questions relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, for Scotland and for Northern Ireland respectively.

Prostate Cancer

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding the establishment of a national screening programme for prostate cancer; and if he will make a statement. [65820]

Mr. Hutton: We have received no such representations. In response to advice from the National Screening Committee (NSC), we advised the National Health Service in Executive Letter (97)12 that screening for prostate cancer should not be offered routinely, based on the existing evidence available. This remains the current policy. The NSC is actively keeping this question under review in the light of emerging evidence.

Medical Schools

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when his implementation group will invite bids from (a) established medical schools, (b) new medical schools and (c) others for provision of 1,000 additional doctors' training places; and if he will make a statement; [66087]

(2) what are the criteria recommended by the joint Department of Health and Higher Education Funding Council for England implementation group, for awarding 1,000 additional medical school places to existing medical schools, new medical schools or new models for doctor training; and if he will make a statement. [66088]

Mr. Denham: The Joint Implementation Group, which has been established to oversee the allocation of universities of the English share of the increase in medical school places, wrote to all English Universities and their National Health Service partners on 8 January 1999, inviting them to submit proposals for the admission of the additional medical students in the years 2000 to 2005. It is open to universities to make proposals, whether or not they already have medical schools. Copies of the 8 January letter are available in the Library.

The invitation set out the objectives and criteria established by the Group, which will be used when considering universities' proposals. The objectives are:

To develop new doctors who are equipped to meet the challenge of changing health and health care needs of patients and populations into the first half of the 21st Century;

To develop new doctors who are able to practise to a very high standard, through being able to appraise and use evidence, to become life-long learners, to maintain professional standards and to be effective team members and leaders;

To develop new doctors who are committed to and skilled in promoting health, preventing ill health, diagnosing and treating injury and disease and caring for people with long term illness and disability;

To develop new doctors who understand the value of partnership and communication, both with their patients, their colleagues, and with members of other professional groups;

To provide a high quality educational experience in an environment in which evaluation and research are fostered and which gives value for money;

To demonstrate an active commitment to the admission of students from a broad range of social and ethnic backgrounds, to reflect the patterns of populations which are served by the NHS;

To ensure that the distribution and patterns of training of students effectively increase the home supply of doctors, and meet the needs of the populations which are served by the NHS;

To enhance quality and value for money through collaboration between universities and partnership with the NHS.

Allergies

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for research into the causes and treatment of allergies; and if he will make a statement. [66258]

Ms Jowell: The Department's policy research programme and the National Health Service research and development programmes are supporting a range of research on allergies and will continue to do so. The Medical Research Council, the main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research, which receives its grant-in-aid from the Office of Science and Technology in the Department of Trade and Industry, is also funding relevant research, including the study of infections, immunity and inflammations, which will underpin work on allergies.

TREASURY

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of people in each decile of (a) benefit unit income and (b) household income, who will gain from the introduction of the working families tax credit. [65421]

Dawn Primarolo: The table shows the estimated numbers gaining from the introduction of Working Families Tax Credit for those eligible for the credit. Overall, about 1 million benefit units will gain.

Number of gainers from introduction of Working Families Tax Credit

Decile	Benefit unit income	Household income
Lowest	[1]—	120,000
2nd	250,000	380,000
3rd	410,000	260,000
4th	210,000	110,000
5th	90,000	70,000

8th	[1]—	[1]—
9th	[1]—	[1]—
Highest	[1]—	[1]—

[1] No gainers or number of gainers too few to calculate reliable estimates.

Note:
Deciles are defined in terms of equivalised income on a benefit unit and household income basis using the McClements scale; decile boundaries are higher for households than benefit units.

Source:
These estimates have been derived from projections of Family Expenditure Survey data to 1999–2000.

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many household incomes of families in Doncaster, Central will rise as a result of the introduction of the working families tax credit. [66565]

Dawn Primarolo: I regret that estimates for individual constituencies are not available.

Expenditure Allocation

Mr. Watts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what were the percentage changes in the share of the allocation of identifiable general expenditure per head between the English regions, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland over the last 10 years; [65589]

(2) what were the percentage changes in allocation of identifiable general expenditure per head between the English regions over the last 10 years. [65590]

Mr. Milburn: Tables containing a breakdown by region of General Government Expenditure (GGE) per capita have been published annually with effect from 1987–88. Figures for 1987–88 to 1990–91 are available in the Appendices of the Statistical Supplement to the Autumn Statement of 1990 to 1992; figures for 1991–92 to 1993–94 in Chapter 7 of Public Expenditure: Statistical Supplement to the Financial Statement and Budget Report for 1994–95 to 1996–97; and for 1994–95 to 1995–96 in Chapter 7 of the last two editions of Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses (PESA). A regional breakdown for 1996–97 will be published in PESA 1999–2000. Figures for GGE per capita in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland appear in the same Chapters as the regional figures, and figures for 1996–97 can be found in PESA 1998–99 (Cm 3901), which was published in April last year.

Identifiable expenditure in England cannot be fully apportioned between the English regions and it is therefore not possible to compare directly spending in the English regions with spending in England as a whole, or with Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. Changes in methodology mean that figures may not be directly comparable across different years.

Departmental Public Service Agreements

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what public consultation took place before setting the objectives and targets detailed in the departmental public service agreements; and if he will make a statement. [65709]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 14 January 1999]: The Government were elected on specific manifesto commitments which are reflected in the objectives and targets in the Public Service Agreements (PSAs). Departmental PSAs take account of consultation on a range of issues which has taken place since the Government were elected.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is his policy to create an independent auditing process for the targets contained in the departmental public service agreements; and if he will make a statement. [65708]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 14 January 1999]: The Government will report annually on progress against targets in the Public Service Agreements and each department will publish further details in its departmental report. This will allow Parliament and the public to judge independently what progress has been made.

Government Spending Plans

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans to announce the new Government spending plans for the years beyond 2001–02; and if he will make a statement. [65711]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 14 January 1999]: Departments' multi-year expenditure limits will be rolled forward for the next three financial years in 2000, as set out in the Comprehensive Spending Review White Paper.

Income Tax (10p Rate)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is his policy to introduce a 10p starter rate of income tax within the current Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [65710]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 14 January 1999]: As the Chancellor made clear in his statement on the pre-Budget report, on 3 November 1998, Official Report, columns 681–792, the Government will introduce a 10p starting rate of income tax when it is economically right to do so.

Video Rentals

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the yield from levying a 10p tax on each rental of a video cassette. [66099]

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what plans he has to introduce a new tax on the rental of video cassettes; [66194]

(2) what estimates he has made of the annual contribution to public funds of a tax on rented video cassettes of (a) 5p, (b) 10p, (c) 15p and (d) 20p. [66195]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 18 January 1999]: No such estimates have been made.

Miller Dywidag Joint Venture

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if Miller Dywidag Joint Venture is registered for the purposes of VAT. [66338]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 18 January 1999]: Under provisions of the Finance Act 1989 and the Official Secrets Act 1989, we are prohibited from disclosing personal information from the VAT register without the permission of the taxpayer unless it can be demonstrated that it is in the public interest to do so. If the hon. Member would like to provide details of the reasons for his question, I shall consider whether there are grounds for disclosing this information to him.

Garage Labour (VAT)

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to apply VAT charged on garage labour for insurance repairs to insurance work carried out in garages which are owned by insurance companies; and if he will make a statement. [66385]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs are reviewing the VAT treatment of vehicle repairs carried out by motor insurers.

Electrical Contracting Industry

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the beneficial taxation concessions granted to the Joint Industry Board for Electrical Contracting Industry by the Inland Revenue and referred to in their explanatory notes and rules (May 1969). [66147]

Dawn Primarolo: I cannot comment on arrangements that the Joint Industry Board for Electrical Contracting Industry may have entered into with the Inland Revenue. They are confidential and a matter between the Board and the Inland Revenue.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Commercial Lobbyists

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what rules or guidance his Department has to govern the (a) formal and (b) informal interaction between his civil servants and commercial lobbyists. [66209]

Mr. Hoon: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply the Prime Minister gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 27 July 1998, Official Report, column 4.

Legal Advisers

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department for what reason the age of 40 years was decided upon as the minimum age for current legal advisers in magistrates courts to be exempt from the requirements of the Justices' Clerks (Qualification of Assistants) (Amendment) Rules 1998; and if he will similarly exempt all postholders, irrespective of age. [66120]

Mr. Hoon: The decision to exempt those people who are aged 40 or older strikes the right balance between the important aim of a fully professionally qualified service and the practical difficulties faced by some individuals. Considerable thought was given to the question of whether all existing court clerks should be exempted, but it was decided that this was not a reasonable option. Some of these clerks are in their early to mid-20s and can be expected to work until they are in their mid-50s. It was felt that such a long term timescale before all clerks were professionally qualified did not match the timescale for modernising the magistrates courts to meet the challenges emerging now and in the future.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to ensure that all reasonable steps are being taken by the security service to ensure that, when processing personal data for the purpose of assisting the police, the data are processed in a way compatible with section 29 of the Data Protection Act 1998. [65980]

Mr. Straw: The Director of the Security Service is under a statutory duty to ensure that no information is obtained by the Service except so far as necessary for the proper discharge of its functions, including supporting the activities of police forces and other law enforcement agencies in the prevention and detection of serious crime. We have already announced that, in line with existing policy, all personal data held by the Security Service is subject to exemption under section 28 of the 1998 Act. We do not envisage any circumstances in which it would be necessary to rely upon the exemption provisions in section 29.

Home Affairs Council (Terrorist Threats)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the latest six monthly report on terrorist threats to EU member states discussed at the Home Affairs Council on 3 and 4 December; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [66143]

Mr. Straw: No. Article 4 of the relevant Council decision provides that

"access to a Council document shall not be granted where its disclosure could undermine the protection of the public interest, public security, international relations, monetary stability, court proceedings, inspections and investigations". I am satisfied accordingly that the Terrorism Threat Assessment Document should not be released.

Europol

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the proposed role of Europol in the establishment of Economic and Monetary Union, pursuant to the ECOFIN meeting of 19 May. [66140]

Kate Hoey: The ECONFIN Council meeting on 19 May 1998 concluded that a database and information system for the storage and exchange of law enforcement data on counterfeiting the Euro might need to be established. We take the view that Europol should be responsible for any such database. The issue remains under discussion with our European partners.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the nature of United Kingdom participation in Europol's work programme for 1999, as established at the Home Affairs Councils of 3 and 4 December. [66138]

Kate Hoey: In 1999, the United Kingdom will contribute fully to all aspects of Europol's work in accordance with the Europol Convention. The United Kingdom will also continue to take a full part in monitoring, managing and developing the organisation through the Justice and Home Affairs Council, the Europol Management Board and other relevant bodies.

Gaming Act 1968

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will announce his response to the consultation on modernisation of the Gaming Act 1968. [66370]

Mr. George Howarth: We have been discussing specific issues with the Gaming Board and the industry, and hope to make an announcement shortly.

Illegal Lotteries

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of prosecutions in each of the last four years for which figures are available for alleged illegal operation of lotteries licensed under the Lotteries and Amusements Act 1976; and what, for each successful prosecution, was the fine or sentence imposed and the names of those convicted. [66266]

Mr. George Howarth: The table sets out the information we have from court reports. We do not collect the names of those convicted.

Number of defendants prosecuted at magistrates' courts and convicted at all courts for lottery offences under sections 2, 3, 4, 13 and 14 of the Lotteries and Amusements Act 1976 England and Wales

Offences/disposal	1994	1995	1996	1997

Video Classification

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will make any changes to the authority responsible for making arrangements for the classification of video works under the Video Recordings Act 1984; and if he will make a statement. [66999]

Mr. Straw: Following the proposal for designation which I laid before Parliament on 12 November 1998, I have today designated Lord Taylor of Warwick and Ms Janet Lewis Jones under section 4(4) of the Video Recordings Act 1984. Lord Taylor and Janet Lewis Jones were appointed as Vice Presidents designate of the British Board of Film Classification on 12 November 1998, and I am designating them, in that capacity, to replace Monica Sims.

I have placed in the Library a copy of my Notice of Designation and the text of letters I am sending to Lord Taylor and Janet Lewis Jones confirming the designation.

PRIME MINISTER

Franco-British Summit

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the consequences of the Franco-British summit at St. Malo on the development of a shared African policy particularly in relation to (a) intelligence matters, (b) the ethical foreign policy and (c) arms supplies to Governments-in-exile. [66341]

The Prime Minister: At St. Malo both Governments agreed to seek to harmonise their policies on Africa and pursue close co-operation on the ground; to promote the EU Common Position on Human Rights, Democratic Principles, the Rule of Law and Good Governance in Africa; and to attach particular importance to tackling problems of debt and the maintenance of a significant level of development assistance. We intend to follow this up by intensified exchange of diplomatic reporting and other diplomatic collaboration. There is no intention to develop a shared policy on any of the areas mentioned by the right hon. Member.

Cross-party Co-operation

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the areas of co-operation with the Liberal Democrats through the Joint Cabinet Consultative Committee system where he intends to use their contributions to develop policy. [65816]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 18 January 1999]: Any contributions of the Liberal Democrats with the Joint Consultative Committee may be used in the development of policy, as may other contributions from a wide variety of sources.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to extend the remit of the Joint Cabinet Consultative Committee to involve (a) the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) and (b) other Liberal Democrat right hon. and hon. Members in the development of Government policy on environmental issues. [66403]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The terms of reference of the Joint Consultative Committee are

"to consider policy issues of joint interest to the Government and the Liberal Democrats".

The Minister for the Cabinet Office and the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed are currently reviewing the work of the Committee, including what policy areas might be discussed at the Committee in future. Their review is not yet complete.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what knowledge Her Majesty's Government have of the number of civilian casualties to which he referred in his letter to the hon. Member for Linlithgow of 13 January. [66492]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 January 1999]: As I said in my letter to my hon. Friend, the risk of civilian casualties was a major consideration in selecting targets during Operation Desert Fox. Only precision guided weapons were used where there was any risk of collateral damage. As I said, we regret any civilian injuries and deaths which may have occurred, but we are confident that these were minimal. There have been no reliable reports to the contrary.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what response he has made to the request by the Government of France on 22 December that Britain and the US should disclose the results of their attack against Iraq. [65649]

The Prime Minister: The Government have disclosed the results of military action against Iraq. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence sent a full report on the effects of Operation Desert Fox to all Members of the House on 22 December. An updated report will be issued shortly.

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what action was taken by himself, or with President Clinton, in response to the admission by a member of the UNSCOM arms inspectors in Iraq that UNSCOM information was being passed to the Israeli Intelligence Service; [66002]

(2) when he was first informed that certain members or a member of the UNSCOM arms inspectors in Iraq were in touch with the Israeli Intelligence Service. [66003]

The Prime Minister: UNSCOM is entitled to seek information and advice from all possible sources in pursuit of its mandate to destroy Iraq's Weapons of Mass Destruction capability.

UNSCOM Executive Chairman Richard Butler has made clear that he has always insisted on all UNSCOM activity being carried out strictly in pursuit of its disarmament mandate, not the benefit of any individual member state.

Joint Cabinet Consultative Committee

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister what sanctions would apply to Liberal Democrat Party members of the Joint Cabinet Consultative Committee considering foreign policy and defence and security issues who disclosed the contents of classified material. [66510]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 January 1999]: All members of the Joint Consultative Committee including the Liberal Democrat members are covered by the Official Secrets Act 1989 in respect of the Committee's work.

Honours Lists

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Prime Minister how many United Kingdom nominations his office received for New Year and Birthday Honours in 1998; and how many United Kingdom honours were awarded in (a) the 1998 Birthday List and (b) the 1999 New Year List. [65905]

The Prime Minister [pursuant to his reply, 18 January 1999, c. 343]: The second sentence contains a typographical error and should read:

"The number of awards in my Honours List covering the whole range of activities in the United Kingdom made at (a) Birthday 1998 was 976 and at (b) New Year 1999 was 983".

NORTHERN IRELAND

Joint Ministerial Councils

7. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement about the relevance of joint ministerial councils and concordats for the new arrangements in Northern Ireland. [64861]

Mr. Paul Murphy: After Devolution, the Government and the new administrations in Belfast, Edinburgh and Cardiff will need to work together very closely on a number of important issues. Some of this work will be set out in formal agreements—or, concordats—agreed by all concerned.

In addition, liaison and consultation will be achieved through the setting up of a Joint Ministerial Committee. These arrangements are purely within a UK context.

Health Policy

8. Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions she has held on future health policy since publication of the Acheson report into inequalities in health. [64862]

14. Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions she has had on future health policy since the publication of the Acheson report into inequalities in health. [64868]

Mr. McFall: I welcome Sir Donald's report. Under the new Targeting Social Need initiative, all Northern Ireland Departments are to produce Action Plans by the summer. These will address health and other inequalities. The Department of Health and Social Services has already initiated a process of consultation with relevant interests on the substance of its Action Plan. This will take into account Sir Donald's recommendations.

Women

9. Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she has set the Government's priorities in relation to policy for women in Northern Ireland. [64863]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Government are putting in place a number of important policies, such as action on violence against women, childcare provision and family friendly employment.

Furthermore, our commitment to equality for everyone in society is a key part of the Good Friday Agreement.

I would also like to see more women from Northern Ireland in public life generally—in the Assembly and in this House.

Trade Links

10. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to promote trade between Northern Ireland, the Republic of Ireland and Great Britain. [64864]

Mr. Ingram: The Industrial Development Board (IDB) and the Local Enterprise Development Unit (LEDU) organise and support company participation in GB trade exhibitions, meet the buyer events and other trade initiatives.

IDB, LEDU and the Northern Ireland Growth Challenge have been developing linkages between Northern Ireland suppliers and major GB and ROI purchasers.

Belfast (Economic Regeneration)

11. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made on the economic regeneration of Belfast. [64865]

Mr. Ingram: Good progress is being made. Unemployment rates have fallen—down 8.1 per cent. since October 1997. Major Laganside developments are clearly visible. 1998 has also seen 3 new hotels open in the city and investment announcements which include 5 new software companies and 3 new call centres.

Small Businesses

12. Ms Southworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps she is taking to support the development of small businesses. [64866]

Mr. Ingram: LEDU (Local Enterprise Development Unit) is the Government Agency with responsibility for small business development in Northern Ireland. LEDU assists small businesses in Northern Ireland to become more competitive, by providing information, guidance and financial support.

With the 1998 Budget the Government made provision for considerable reductions on the regulatory and fiscal burdens on small firms, including the United Kingdom wide University Challenge Fund.

A major economic strategy aimed at promoting enterprise and encouraging investment throughout Northern Ireland was also announced by the Chancellor during May 1998.

Integrated Schools

13. Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Northern Ireland how many integrated schools have been approved since 1997. [64867]

17. Miss Melanie Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many integrated schools have been approved since 1 May 1997. [64871]

Mr. McFall: Eight new integrated schools have been approved since May 1997—one new grant-maintained integrated secondary school and seven controlled integrated schools. Conditional approval has been granted to a further three schools from September 1999—Oakwood Primary School, Strangford College and Spires Primary School.

Social Security Fraud

15. Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures she is taking to tackle social security fraud. [64869]

Mr. McFall: The Social Security Agency has instigated a comprehensive programme of initiatives based on risk assessment. It includes data matching across benefit systems, interviewing appropriate claimants both at initial claim stage and during the lifetime of claims, and closer working with other Agencies and Departments.

Decommissioning

16. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made on the decommissioning of illegally held arms and explosives; and if she will make a statement. [64870]

20. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made on the decommissioning of illegally held arms and explosives; and if she will make a statement. [64874]

24. Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the decommissioning of terrorist weapons in Northern Ireland. [64878]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry), Official Report, column 896.

22. Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will publish targets for the decommissioning of weapons during 1999. [64876]

Mr. Ingram: The Good Friday Agreement committed all the participants to the total disarmament of all paramilitary organisations. The participants also confirmed their intention to continue to work constructively and in good faith with the Independent Commission and to use any influence they may have to achieve the decommissioning of all paramilitary arms, within two years of the Referendum last May and in the context of the implementation of the overall settlement.

25. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will stop the release of terrorist prisoners until the IRA decommission and surrender weapons and explosives. [64879]

Mr. Ingram: The early release of prisoners is an integral part of the Agreement, one which the Government are honouring in full. The Government will not depart from the Agreement by introducing a direct linkage between decommissioning and prisoner releases, which is not in the Agreement nor in the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998.

The Government have also made it clear that there must be decommissioning of paramilitary weapons. It is an essential part of the Agreement and we are determined to ensure that all sides meet their obligations. The way to achieve decommissioning is for the full implementation of the Agreement by all parties.

29. Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what advice she received from her security advisers at the time of the Good Friday agreement and subsequently concerning the IRA's intentions as regards the decommissioning of arms and explosives. [64883]

Mr. Ingram: In the Good Friday Agreement all parties reaffirmed their commitment to the total disarmament of all paramilitary organisations. The hon. Member for Mid-Ulster (Mr. McGuinness) was nominated on 2 September 1998 as a contact between Sinn Fein and the Independent International Commission on Decommissioning. The IRA know very well that they must deliver decommissioning as part of the Agreement.

Human Rights and Equality Commissions

18. Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made in the establishment of (a) the Human Rights Commission and (b) the Equality Commission. [64872]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Interviews for the post of Chief Commissioner for the Human Rights Commission were held on 6 and 8 January, interviews for the posts of Commissioner will begin on 21 January. The Secretary of State announced earlier this week that the Chief Commissioner designate is Professor Sidney Brice Dickson of the University of Ulster. A further announcement on the appointment of commissioners will be made at a later date.

A Working Group, comprising the Chairs and Chief Executives of each of the four existing bodies, along with a staff representative, has been established to consider and recommend on the shape and structure of the future Equality Commission. The group is chaired by Dr. Joan Stringer. It is due to report in stages in January. Ministers have asked for the group's early views on Commission posts and will proceed with the appointment process as soon as those views have been received.

28. Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made in the establishment of the (a) Human Rights Commission and (b) Equality Commission. [64882]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Interviews for the post of Chief Commissioner for the Human Rights Commission were held on 6 and 8 January; interviews for the post of Commissioners will begin on 21 January. The Secretary of State announced earlier this week that she has appointed Professor Sidney Brice Dickson as Chief Commissioner designate, a further announcement on the appointment of commissioners will be made at a later date. There has been a very good response to both advertisements and my right hon. Friend expects to be able to appoint a powerful commission.

A Working Group comprising the Chairs and Chief Executives of each of the four existing bodies, along with a staff representative, has been established to consider and recommend on the shape and structure of the future Equality Commission. The group is chaired by Dr. Joan Stringer. It is due to report in stages in January. Ministers have asked for the group's early views on Commission posts and will proceed with the appointment process as soon as those views have been received.

Assembly

19. Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made with preparing the Northern Ireland Assembly for devolution of power. [64873]

Marjorie Mowlam: I have drawn up a timetable setting out the necessary legislative and other preparatory steps which will need to be completed to enable devolution to take effect in early March. Copies of that timetable are available from officials in the NIO. I intend to keep in contact with the First Minister and Deputy First Minister and the Assembly parties regarding the detail of the relevant Orders required to be brought before this House over the coming weeks.

Peace Process

21. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement about progress on the peace process. [64875]

Marjorie Mowlam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Murphy), Official Report, column 899.

Victims of Violence

23. Mrs. Irene Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps she is taking to help the victims of violence in Northern Ireland. [64877]

Mr. Ingram: I have announced a number of significant funding initiatives to support victims and a newsletter outlining progress was published on 8 January, a copy of which has been placed in the House of Commons Library. I plan to announce further measures once the outcome of the recently concluded consultation exercise, seeking the views of victims, is known.

Ice Plant, Portavogie Harbour

26. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on progress on the provision of a new ice plant at Portavogie Harbour. [64880]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Currently, the consulting engineers commissioned by the Northern Ireland Fishing Harbour Authority are assessing if the preferred site on the North Quay is suitable for the ice plant. If all goes according to the Authority's plan, it is anticipated that work on the new ice plant will commence in the summer.

Prison Officers (Redundancy Terms)

27. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the redundancy terms being offered to prison officers. [64881]

Mr. Ingram: The terms being offered to prison officers include all benefits payable under the Civil Service Compensation Scheme (NI) but in addition, and to recognise long service in the Northern Ireland Prison Service, there is an enhancement equivalent to 1 month's salary for each year of NIPS service up to a maximum of 24 months.

Benefits (Derry)

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in the Derry City Council area were in receipt of (a) income support, (b) jobseekers allowance and (c) incapacity benefit in (i) December 1997 and (ii) December 1998. [65311]

Mr. McFall: The latest information available is as follows:

	Number of claimants
Income Support
May 1997	13,200
May 1998	13,745
Jobseekers Allowance[1]
December 1997	5,779

Planning Applications

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many planning applications are currently the subject of public inquiries; what assessment she has made of the adequacy of the resources of the planning section of the Department of the Environment to deal with these public inquiries; what delays there currently are in the determination of these planning applications; and if she will make a statement. [65676]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Planning Service under its chief executive, Mr. T. W. Stewart. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from T. W. Stewart to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 20 January 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Question, about the number of planning applications currently the subject of Public Inquiries.

There are 32 applications currently the subject of Public Inquiries under the scope of Article 31 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991. These are at various stages of consideration. For example, four applications are awaiting the opening of inquiry proceedings to be held by the Planning Appeals Commission (PAC); two applications are currently awaiting the recommendation and report of the PAC following public inquiry, while 26 are at various stages of consideration by the Department following the receipt of the PAC report and recommendation. One additional Public Inquiry has been postponed at the applicant's request.

As regards the resourcing of the Planning Service to deal with these Public Inquiries, resources are allocated in line with the targets set out in its Corporate and Business Plans 1998/99–2000/2001, which are reviewed annually. While there are no delays directly attributable to resource difficulties, nevertheless, certain decision notices have been delayed, largely because of policy considerations.

For example, two decisions in relation to major applications for waste disposal have been deferred by the Minister, pending the outcome of the consultation exercise on the Department's Waste Management Strategy. Decisions on a number of other major housing applications are awaiting legal agreements with the applicants on the implementation of the Department's Quality Initiative. There is also an added time factor in drawing up and agreeing appropriate conditions to be attached to the specific planning applications.

I can assure you, however, that the Planning Service continually strives to expedite all decisions, but particularly those on major applications.

I do hope this is helpful.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she plans to publish the strategy paper setting out her approach to normalisation. [65995]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 19 January 1999]: The Secretary of State hopes to publish a paper on security strategy shortly.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many intensive care beds there were in each of the Golden Six hospitals in Northern Ireland at 31 December 1998. [65947]

Mr. McFall [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The table shows the number of intensive care beds in acute hospitals at 31 December 1998.

Notes:
1. The figures do not include the additional beds which will be opened to accommodate the transfer of services from South Tyrone Hospital (16 Obstetrics and 6 Gynaecology).
2. The figures relate to the 1st of each month at midnight.
3. Paediatric beds increased to 36 on 5 October 1998.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many high dependency beds there are in each acute hospital in Northern Ireland; what was the percentage usage of these beds in each hospital in the last year for which figures are available; and if she will define the difference between high dependency and intensive care facilities. [65949]

Mr. McFall [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The table shows the average number of high dependency beds available daily and percentage occupancy in each acute hospital in Northern Ireland during 1998.

[1] Musgrave Park has 14 high dependency beds but is not, strictly speaking, an acute hospital.

As regards the difference between high dependency and intensive care facilities, broadly speaking, intensive care is usually reserved for patients with potential or established organ failure. An Intensive Care Unit (ICU) should therefore offer the facilities for diagnosis, prevention and treatment of multiple organ failure.

A High Dependency Unit (HDU) is a clinical area offering a standard of care intermediate between the acute ward and full intensive care. The HDU should not manage patients with multi-organ failure but should provide monitoring and support to patients at risk of developing organ system failure. A HDU should be able to undertake short-term resuscitative measures and may provide ventilator support for a short time (usually less than 24 hours) prior to the transfer of a patient to an ICU.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average occupancy time for intensive care beds in Northern Ireland during 1998. [65948]

Mr. McFall [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Royal Victoria Hospital

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what factors underlay the delays in treatment at the orthopaedics unit at the Royal Victoria Hospital in December; and what was the average time taken to treat patients with fractures (a) on 21 December and (b) on 11 January. [65950]

Mr. McFall [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The recent upsurge in the number of fracture patients treated at the Royal Victoria Hospital must be seen in the context of a 100 per cent. increase in the fractures treated in the 2 central Belfast Hospitals in the last 10 years. Additional pressures created by a surge in emergency admissions before Christmas and the general effects of the cold weather exacerbated the problems.

On 21 December, 6 patients were treated for fractures in the Royal Victoria Hospital. The average time waited by these patients was 4.6 days. On 11 January, 5 fracture patients were treated in the Royal with an average waiting time of 5 days.

I am determined to ensure that patients admitted to hospital with fractures receive the treatment that they require as soon as possible and certainly no later than the 2 days laid down by current clinical standards and I have taken appropriate steps to achieve this.

Beef Exports

Mr. Walter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the level of beef exports from Northern Ireland. [64857]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Government are pleased to record that regular weekly exports from Northern Ireland under the Export Certified Herds Scheme started in September 1998. The quantities involved have been small, averaging around 20 tonnes per week involving 7 European Countries. The Republic of South Africa (RSA) have also recently confirmed their willingness to take NI beef again although exports to South Africa have not yet started.

SCOTLAND

Inward Investment

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his action to promote inward investment to Scotland; and if he must seek the approval of the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry before making any offer to a potential investor. [66135]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 18 January 1999]: Locate in Scotland promotes Scotland's advantages as a business location, working in partnership with the Local Enterprise Companies, Highlands and Islands Enterprise and other bodies in both the public and private sectors. Its resources are targeted on those markets which generate the strongest flows of outward investment and where Scotland's competitive strengths make it an attractive location.

Offers of assistance are subject to inter-Departmentally agreed rules designed to ensure appropriate co-ordination of assistance offered across the UK. These rules are currently being revised to reflect the devolution settlements and the revised arrangements will be set out in a concordat on financial assistance to industry, which we hope to publish in due course.

Sewage Sludge Recycling

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the letter of 30 September 1998 from the Minister with responsibility for agriculture, the environment and fisheries to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, if he will make a statement on the outcome of his talks with the water industry and the British Retailers Consortium on the recycling of sewage sludge on farmland. [65399]

Mr. Macdonald: The talks were between the water industry and the British Retail Consortium. The talks resulted in an agreement on the recycling of sewage sludge to farmland. This included ending the application of untreated sewage sludge to grass for silage and grazing by the end of 1998. It also included the phasing out of the application of all untreated sludge to agricultural land by the end of 2001. The Government have already announced they will amend the relevant regulations and code of practice to enforce the 2001 deadline.

Urban Waste Water Treatment

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce the date by which secondary treatment of waste water and sewage will be required under the terms of the European Union's Urban Waste Water Treatment Directive; and if he will make a statement. [66350]

Mr. Macdonald: The Urban Waste Water Treatment Directive and our own Regulations require secondary treatment to be applied for discharges to normal waters (i.e. those not designated as sensitive or less sensitive) from communities with population equivalents above 15,000 by the end of 2000. The same standard of treatment must be applied to discharges from smaller communities by the end of 2005.

Compliance with the Directive is a major initiative for the Scottish Water Authorities who will be undertaking capital investment programmes costing £1.5 billion, over the next three years, to modernise the water and sewage industry.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Scottish Office Development Department post-project evaluation of the socio-economic impact of the Skye Bridge is expected to be completed; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [66265]

Mr. Macdonald: This evaluation is due to be completed by the end of February 1999. A copy of the Final Report will be placed in the Members' Library.

Employment (Agriculture)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since 1974 the number of people in Scotland employed in (a) agriculture and (b) ancillary trades dependent on agriculture broken down by region. [66604]

Mr. Dewar: The available information is given in the table. Due to reclassification of minor holdings in the Agricultural Census, consistent information is available only from 1976.

Ward Beds

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many ward beds were available in Glasgow in 1995; how many ward beds will be available in Glasgow upon the completion of the new Law Hospital; and what were the service costs for the old Law Hospital for each of the years between 1990 and 1995. [65956]

Mr. Galbraith: The number of in-patients beds within the Greater Glasgow Health Board (GGHB) area in 1995 was 8,224. GGHB recognises that changes in flows of patients from Lanarkshire upon completion of the new Law Hospital will impact on the level of demand for in-patient beds, and is still in the process of discussing this, and timescales, with Lanarkshire Health Board. The total Hospital running costs for the old Law Hospital for each of the years between 1990 and 1995 are as follows:

Year	£000
1990	20,470
1991	21,840
1992	28,690
1993	33,078
1994	38,904
1995	40,385

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Commercial Lobbyists

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what rules or guidance his Department has to govern the (a) formal and (b) informal interaction between his civil servants and commercial lobbyists. [66203]

Mr. Morley: Any contact that this Department's staff have with people outside government, including lobbyists, should be conducted in accordance with the Civil Service Code and the principles of public life set out by the Nolan Committee. The Prime Minister also announced the publication of practical guidance on handling such contacts on 27 July 1998, Official Report, column 4, which was circulated to all Departments by the Cabinet Office.

Genetically Engineered Crops

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what independent scientific research on genetically engineered crops the regulatory authorities in the United Kingdom and the EU have access to; and what are the arrangements for licensing such research. [66016]

Mr. Meale: I have been asked to reply.

The regulatory authorities in the United Kingdom have to access all scientific research papers and articles published in international scientific journals. These are available through abstracting services, departmental libraries and the British Library.

The regulatory authorities also have access to independent research through members of the Government's advisory committees on biotechnology, such as the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE) and the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes (ACNFP). Members of these committees are leading experts in their own fields and will be aware of the latest scientific research and developments. Regulatory authorities in the EU will have access to similar sources of scientific research results and exchange information at regular meetings of the Competent Authorities.

My Department and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food fund independent scientific research on genetically modified crops. I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the then Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Wallesey (Angela Eagle), on 8 June 1998, Official Report, column 313, and the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 12 November 1998, Official Report, columns 316–18. The EU also funds biotechnology research through the Framework Programmes.

Where the research involves the release of a genetically modified organism to the environment this requires prior approval (licensing) from the Secretary of State or the relevant Competent Authority under Directive 90/220/EC on the deliberate Release of genetically modified organisms to the environment. Research involving the contained use of genetically modified crops must be notified to Health and Safety Executive under provisions in Part VI of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and The Genetically Modified Organisms (Risk Assessment) (Records and Exemptions) Regulations 1996, as amended in 1997. The human health and safety aspects of larger GMOs are covered by the Genetically Modified Organisms (Contained Use) Regulations 1992, as amended in 1996.

Raw Cows' Milk

Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what conclusions he and the Secretary of State for Wales have reached following their review of the law relating to the drinking of raw cows' milk in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [67090]

Mr. Nick Brown: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have decided not to stop the sale of raw cows' drinking milk in England and Wales. However, we intend to introduce tighter checks to benefit consumers who choose to drink raw cows' milk.

The new measures will include increasing the frequency of official microbiological sample testing of raw cows' drinking milk at production premises to four times a year and increasing the frequency of official inspections of registered raw cows' milk production holdings to once a year. These measures will begin immediately.

Raw milk producers will continue to pay for official checks, and we will be putting in hand arrangements to extend the scope of enforcement at production holdings. In addition, we intend that on-farm caterers will no longer be exempted from the charges for microbiological sample testing, and also that the full costs of inspection and sample testing will be recovered. This will necessitate changes to the relevant regulations, and in due course we will issue draft regulations for public consultation.

There is already a requirement to label raw cows' drinking milk with a public health warning. We will be putting into place arrangements to ensure this is given greater prominence. In addition, these arrangements will also require that labels on retail packaging, and notices displayed at on-farm catering premises, must include the Chief Medical Officer's advice, which is that children, pregnant women, elderly people and those who are currently unwell or have a chronic illness should not consume raw cows' milk.

We emphasise in the strongest possible terms that the industry is responsible, and remains responsible, for the production of safe food. Producers of raw cows' drinking milk must ensure that it is produced to the best hygienic standards.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of the study areas required by the Krebs report to investigate links between badgers and bovine TB have (a) been identified, (b) been surveyed and (c) been announced, and in how many study areas the study has been (i) commenced and (ii) suspended. [66080]

Mr. Rooker: The Krebs report concluded that a minimum of 30, 100 square kilometre areas be used for the randomised badger culling trial as part of a wider programme including epidemiological and research work. This recommendation was supported by the Independent Scientific Group appointed to advise on the implementation of the Krebs report recommendations. The areas will be grouped into triplets each containing three areas, one subject to proactive culling, one to reactive culling and the third a control area where no culling will take place.

The first two triplets were designated by the Group in August 1998 and announced on 17 August. One was on the Devon and Cornwall border and the other on the borders of Gloucestershire and Herefordshire. The remaining 24 areas (8 triplets) are to be phased in over the next two years, and will be in areas where the incidence of TB in cattle is historically highest and where there is the greatest risk of contiguous and repeat breakdowns. The next triplets will be identified shortly, and will then be announced.

Once a triplet is identified and mapped, land holders are contacted and asked for permission to survey the land for badger activity and to remove badgers from culling areas. Although participation in the trial is on a voluntary basis, the overwhelming majority of land holders agreed to take part. Visiting and surveying in the first two triplets began on 28 August. Surveying of the Devon/Cornwall triplet was completed at the end of November, and is continuing in the other triplet.

On 4 November 1998, in accordance with prescribed procedures and in the presence of an independent witness, each area in the Devon/Cornwall triplet was randomly allocated one of the three treatments (proactive, reactive, survey only). Cage trapping of badgers in the area around Putford which had been allocated proactive culling was carried out from 2 to 13 December 1998 inclusive. Work in the area progressed as planned and was not disrupted significantly. 238 badgers were caught and humanely despatched by shooting. The carcases were subject to post mortem examination in MAFF laboratories and samples have been taken for further analysis.

Once the initial proactive culling is complete in a triplet the comparative study of TB incidents in cattle begins. This is the position in the Cornwall/Devon triplet where TB incidents in the three trial areas are being monitored. Where a new TB incident is confirmed in the reactive culling area, arrangements will be made to cull badgers from social groups associated with the farm involved. No culling will take place during the closed season which runs from 1 February to 30 April inclusive.

Work has not been suspended in any area.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Learning Direct

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many calls each month to Learning Direct are provided for in the contract with his Department. [66354]

Mr. Mudie: In its first year of operation, the DfEE set Learning Direct a target of 250,000 calls. Specific monthly targets were not set.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what evidence he has of successful referrals by the Learning Direct helpline overall and broken down by (a) age, (b) sex, (c) employment status, (d) region and (e) qualifications. [66358]

Mr. Mudie: It is too early to measure the success of referrals by the Learning Direct helpline. Information on follow up action of callers will be made available as part of the evaluation process of the helpline later in the year.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what are the most common areas of inquiry made to the Learning Direct helpline. [66357]

Mr. Mudie: The most common areas of inquiry made to the Learning Direct helpline are requests for information and advice on Further Education (33 per cent. of calls), information technology and computers (18 per cent.) professional development (17 per cent.) and Higher Education (15 per cent.). Inquiries to the helpline are, however, dependent to some extent on the nature of marketing of Learning Direct and associated broadcaster campaigns.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people have telephoned the Learning Direct helpline during each month of its operation. [66353]

Mr. Mudie: There were 406,069 successful callers to the Learning Direct helpline during the period from its official launch on 25 February to the end of December 1998. A monthly breakdown is as follows:

	Number
February	5,241
March	15,654
April	11,970
May	165,816
June	78,272
July	23,400
August	28,987
September	26,710
October	21,496
November	15,314
December	13,209

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the percentage of callers to the Learning Direct helpline who succeed in reaching an operator (a) on average and (b) at the busiest times. [66263]

Mr. Mudie: Currently, 86 per cent. of callers to Learning Direct are successful in reaching an operator. The figures for callers at the busiest times are not available.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of callers to the Learning Direct helpline get through at the first attempt (a) on average and (b) at the busiest times. [66355]

Mr. Mudie: A recent independent evaluation of Learning Direct showed that, on average, 77 per cent. of those using Learning Direct were connected at the first attempt. The figures for callers at the busiest times are not available.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish a breakdown of callers to the Learning Direct helpline by (a) age, (b) sex, (c) employment status and (d) highest qualification gained. [66356]

Mr. Mudie: Learning Direct offers a confidential service to callers. Therefore, a breakdown of all callers is not available. Based on a 10 per cent. random sample, the breakdown of callers to Learning Direct is as follows:

	Percentage
(a) Age
Up to 17	2

Sure Start Strategy

Ann Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has for implementing the Sure Start strategy. [67089]

Ms Jowell: Sure Start is a vital element in the Government's work to increase opportunity and create equal chances for young children and their families in disadvantaged areas. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment and I are taking forward the Government's £452 million strategy to establish at least 250 local Sure Start programmes in England over the next three years.

We are announcing today the first 60 trailblazer districts for Sure Start. In identifying them we have taken into account evidence of significant local deprivation and existing good practice; and a wish to see Sure Start principles taking root quickly in all regions, in different types of area and in places where they can complement other Government initiatives to regenerate communities and tackle social exclusion.

The trailblazer districts will play a major role in making Sure Start a reality. Each will identify one catchment area appropriate for a local Sure Start programme, and bring together an inclusive partnership responsible for making a formal application for Sure Start funding to improve and extend services in that area. Expressions of interest from the 60 districts are invited by 9 February and full applications by 19 March. Applications will not compete against each other. We are providing a team of expert advisers to help local partners prepare them, and they will be approved if they meet various criteria, including the inclusion of all the key partners at local level and effective demonstration of the key principles underpinning Sure Start.

We expect the first trailblazers to be up and running later in the year. They will help develop Sure Start, its implementation and evaluation, and act as mentors for subsequent programmes. More Sure Start districts will be announced in due course.

Further information and guidance on Sure Start is being published today to support trailblazers in their work. Copies will be placed in the Library.

The 60 trailblazer districts are:

Edison Project

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment his Department has made of the performance of the Edison Project in running schools in the United States of America; what discussions he has held on its possible use to run schools in (a) education action zones and (b) other areas where those schools are deemed to have failed; what is his policy towards the use of profit-making organisations to run state schools; and if he will make a statement. [65917]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department has not carried out any assessment of the activities of the Edison Project in the United States of America, although we have seen reports of some published evaluations. Officials have talked to representatives of the Project about the scope for private sector involvement in EAZs and in turning round failing schools. In all cases it has been made clear that as a matter of law the responsibility for running maintained schools rests with the governing body, which is responsible for spending the school budget in the best interests of pupils.

In addition, we have made it clear that "schools run schools", under the Education Act and in accordance with the new fair funding arrangements.

Commercial Lobbyists

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what rules or guidance his Department has to govern the (a) formal and (b) informal interaction between his civil servants and commercial lobbyists. [66193]

Mr. Mudie: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 27 July 1998, Official Report, column 4.

Electrical Contracting Industry

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will place in the Library copies of the contents of Public Record Office file FS27/486 relating to the Joint Industry Board of the Electrical Contracting Industry. [65766]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have been asked to reply.

The file in question is deposited in the Public Records Office and is open for public inspection. The PRO will provide a copy of the contents for the House of Commons Library on request.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EU Fundamental Rights Charter

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on German proposals to preface the European Communities Treaties with a Charter of Fundamental Rights. [66139]

Ms Quin: The Germans have expressed an interest in developing a European Charter of Basic Rights, in consultation with the European Parliament, national parliaments and as many social groups as possible. We will form a view once details of the German proposals are available.

Sri Lanka

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current political situation in Sri Lanka. [66376]

Mr. Fatchett: We believe that a lasting solution to the ethnic conflict in Sri Lanka can be reached only through a political settlement. During my visit to Colombo in November last year I made it clear to the Sri Lankan Government that we remain ready to help in the resolution of the conflict if both sides ask us to play a role. But it is for the Sri Lankan Government and the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam to work to reach a negotiated settlement.

Indonesia

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation in Aceh, Indonesia, with particular reference to Operasi Wibawa '99. [66627]

Mr. Fatchett: We are concerned about the recent reports of violence in Aceh and deeply regret the killings of both civilians and military personnel. We call on all sides to show restraint, and look to the Indonesian Government to conduct a full investigation into the killings and to bring to justice those responsible.

British Council

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much was spent by the British Council in investment in infrastructure and information technology for each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [66235]

Mr. Fatchett: Owing to a change by the British Council accruals accounting in April 1995, the information on investment is available on a consistent basis only for the three-year period from 1995–96 to 1997–98. In each of these years, the British Council's average gross investment in its built estate and in information technology was £12 million. The equivalent figure for the present financial year is £11.3 million while, as a result of the Comprehensive Spending Review, the average for each of the next three years will be £15 million.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British Council work, funded by his Department, to support civil society, human rights and democracy in East and West Africa. [66218]

Mr. Fatchett: The British Council is well placed to promote human rights and good governance because of its unique status and long experience in these fields. In the case of East and West Africa, the British Council manages projects to the value of more than £300,000 under the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's Human Rights Project Fund. These include anti-corruption campaigns, management training for NGO staff, improving judicial systems, networking between human rights groups, women's rights, and programmes to support democracy.

In addition, projects in these fields are funded from the grant-in-aid which the Foreign and Commonwealth Office gives to the British Council

Commercial Lobbyists

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what rules or guidance his Department has to govern the (a) formal and (b) informal interaction between his civil servants and commercial lobbyists. [66202]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 27 July 1998, Official Report, column 4, to my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice).

European Commission

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the name, position and nationality of all EC officials who have been indicted on charges of fraud, dishonesty or maladministration, since 1990 together with details of the disciplinary action taken. [66406]

Ms Quin: We have approached the European Commission for this information. I will write to the hon. Member shortly, placing copies in the Library of the House.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list Commission officials suspended since 1990 on (i) full, (ii) half and (iii) no pay, stating in each case (a) the accusation, (b) the end result of the investigations concerned and (c) the severance pay where supplied; [66321]

(2) what types of firearms are issued to employees of the European Commission; what performance enhancers are made available for these weapons; and what numbers are involved; [66325]

(3) which employees of the European Commission are entrusted with firearms; and under what authority those arms have been issued; [66320]

(4) if he will make a statement on the purpose of firearms being issued to employees of the European Commission; [66326]

(5) what the rules of engagement are for employees of the European Commission entrusted with firearms; [66323]

(6) if he will make a statement on the secured storage facilities available for firearms possessed by the European Commission; [66324]

(7) what training is available in firearms skills for employees of the European Commission. [66322]

Ms Quin: We have approached the Commission for this information. I will write to the right hon. Member shortly, placing copies in the Library of the House.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the report submitted by the Commission at the General Affairs Council of 26 to 27 October 1998 concerning fraud allegations relating to the EC Humanitarian Office; and if he will list the corrected documents submitted. [66379]

Ms Quin: The Commission President, Mr. Santer, gave an oral report to Foreign Ministers over lunch on 25 October 1998. There is no official record. Mr. Santer explained the background to the EC Humanitarian Aid Office fraud and the Commission's proposal to establish an external anti-fraud office (Document 14031—deposited in the House Library on 23 December). It is not clear to which "corrected documents" the right hon. Member refers. If the right hon. Member would care to write to me giving any additional information he may have, I shall be happy to investigate.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will deposit in the Library a copy of all guidelines for Commission staff operating in (a) other Member States and (b) the United Kingdom relating to (i) handling the media and (ii) maintaining political neutrality. [66380]

Ms Quin: We understand from the Commission that there are currently no such written guidelines for staff at Commission Representations in the Member States, including those in the United Kingdom. However, on 11 January 1999, President Santer announced that three codes of conduct would be drawn up governing the work of Members of the Commission and Commission staff. These are expected to cover issues of this kind.

EU Enlargement

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department received each of the European Commission Enlargement reports entitled Enlargement 98 in respect of (a) Poland, (b) Hungary, (c) Czech Republic, (d) Slovenia, (e) Estonia and (f) Cyprus. [66119]

Ms Quin: We received copies of the Commission's Progress Reports on all the candidate countries, via the internet, on 4 November 1998—the day they were agreed by the College of Commissioners. The texts were subsequently presented to the 9 November General Affairs Council. Formal transmission of the texts, from the Commission to the Council Secretariat, took place on 18 December 1998. The Council Secretariat is in the process of forwarding them to Member States. We will deposit copies in the Library of the House once we receive a full set.

General Pinochet

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if reports submitted by the British Embassy in Madrid, to his Department, made reference to potential difficulties for Her Majesty's Government with respect to the presence of General Pinochet in British territory in connection with the work undertaken by Judge Garzón; how many reports submitted by the embassy referred to Judge Garzón's investigations; and if he will make a statement. [66347]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Embassy in Madrid sent four reports in 1997 and 1998 relating to Judge Garzón's investigations into human rights violations in Chile during the Pinochet years. None of these reports anticipated that Judge Garzón's investigations would cause HMG any difficulty.

St. Malo Summit

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Joint Declarations of the St. Malo summit for (a) future co-location of embassies and (b) sharing of restricted information pertaining to local politics in African countries. [66342]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The St. Malo Declaration on Africa agreed that both governments would explore the scope for co-location of Embassies. This would involve sharing premises in one or more sites, if there were benefits to be gained from doing so. We have done this successfully with other countries elsewhere in the world. The Declaration also included provisions for information sharing on the situation in Africa, in particular on countries where either the UK or France is not represented. We see this as a useful area for cooperation, which will be of mutual benefit and will extend our knowledge of these countries.

Burma

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what legal factors he has to take account of with regard to the imposition of financial sanctions on Burma. [66155]

Mr. Fatchett: Financial sanctions need to be compatible with the UK's international obligations. They are a matter for action by the European Community as a whole in accordance with the Treaty of Rome (Articles 73 (g) (1) and 228 (a)). They must also be compatible with membership of the World Trade Organisation. A mandatory United Nations Security Council Resolution would override these obligations but there is at present no consensus for such action.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what communications Her Majesty's Government have had with (a) the United States administration and (b) the Secretary General of the United Nations over the past year in respect of the use to which information obtained by (i) UNSCOM and (b) IAEA inspectors in Iraq has been put. [66429]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have been in regular touch with both the US Administration and the UN Secretary General on many aspects of the work of UNSCOM and the IAEA over the past year.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the allegations by former UNSCOM inspector, Scott Ritter, published in The Sunday Telegraph on 10 January 1999. [66476]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The 10 January The Sunday Telegraph article referred to allegations that the UK withdrew cooperation from UNSCOM last year in protest at US spying activities. This allegation is false. The UK has never withdrawn cooperation from UNSCOM.

UNSCOM is entitled to seek information and advice from all possible sources in pursuit of its mandate to destroy Iraq's Weapons of Mass Destruction capability. UNSCOM Executive Chairman Richard Butler has made clear that he has always insisted on all UNSCOM activity being carried out strictly in pursuit of its disarmament mandate, not to benefit any individual member state. The US has also denied any impropriety in its contacts with UNSCOM.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the observations by the Foreign Minister of France concerning the lifting of sanctions on Iraq. [65397]

Mr. Fatchett: We have welcomed the proposals put forward recently by France as a useful basis for discussion on the way forward on Iraq. However, our position remains that the oil embargo cannot be lifted until Iraq has fulfilled its obligations in relation to its weapons of mass destruction programmes as set out in UN Security Council resolution (UNSCR) 687, and that other sanctions cannot be lifted until Iraq has complied with all its obligations under the relevant UNSCRs.

British Diplomats (Freetown Officials)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which officials in (a) his Department and (b) the Ministry of Defence were informed of the facility extended by the German Government to British diplomats, to communicate with officials in the United Kingdom from Freetown, Sierra Leone, in the years 1997 and 1998; and on which occasions this facility was used. [66628]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Mr. Penfold had access to normal communication whilst at the High Commission in Freetown and whilst in the United Kingdom. Whilst he was in Conakry, Mr. Penfold was able to receive classified telegrams via the German Embassy but used commercial fax facilities for sending messages to London.

The following British Diplomatic Missions were informed in August 1997 that telegrams could be passed to Conakry for Mr. Penfold via Bonn:

Accra, Dakar, Banjul, Abidjan, Lagos, Abuja, Washington, UKMIS New York.

Telegrams that were sent to Bonn for forwarding were marked to this effect and circulated to officials in Government Departments in London including the FCO and MOD.

Bananas

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with (a) European Union ministers about the import duties being placed by the EU on bananas and (b) the United States Government about the retaliatory duties being placed on EU goods; and if he will make a statement. [66259]

Ms Quin: The EU's new banana regime was agreed during the UK Presidency. The Government support the new regime which is designed to help banana dependent Caribbean economies while meeting WTO obligations.

The current EU/US dispute over the WTO compatibility of the new regime was discussed at the December General Affairs Council which my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary attended. EU Foreign Ministers gave their backing to the Commission approach of robustly defending the banana regime while constructively addressing US concerns over the WTO process.

The Government have been working to prevent the imposition of US retaliatory duties. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and other senior Government Ministers have, on several recent occasions, raised the issue with their US counterparts.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Ministers (Business Affairs Investigations)

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to disclose all the papers relating to investigations undertaken by his Department into the business affairs of serving Government Ministers. [66450]

Mr. Byers: My Department has no direct role in the investigation of the business affairs of ministers or any other individuals. Its role is confined to the conduct of limited companies. The extent to which papers may be disclosed depends on the nature of the case itself and other considerations such as the applicable law and commercial confidentiality. Subject to these constraints I would wish to be as open as possible on these matters.

British Airways

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his predecessor received advice from the Permanent Secretary at the DTI that there was no conflict of interest which prevented him dealing with competition issues arising from the proposed British Airways alliance with American Airlines. [66644]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 19 January 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson), on 8 December 1998, Official Report, column 65.

Indonesia

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what amount of export credit guarantees are outstanding for Indonesia (a) for defence-related equipment and (b) for other goods. [64533]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 11 January 1999]: From data readily available, ECGD's exposure on Indonesia currently stands at £1,575 million and breaks down as follows:

	£ million
(a) Defence related equipment	760
(b) Other goods	815

Defence-related equipment includes all ECGD covered business with defence buyers, including sales of non-lethal equipment.

Wellcome Trust

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the letter of 22 September from the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Science to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, if he will list the contributions of the Wellcome Trust to significant additional investments in areas of science (a) in the biomedical area and (b) outside the biomedical area. [65395]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 19 January 1999]: As previously announced, we are grateful to the Wellcome Trust for providing the following funding for joint activities with the Government in support of major research programmes within the Science and Engineering Base.

	£ million
Joint infrastructure fund	300
University Challenge	up to 18
New synchrotron radiation facility	110

These contributions are additional to the Trust's previously planned expenditure on university research over the life-time of these projects.

None of these projects have yet progressed to a stage where payments to recipients have been made, but all of these contributions will be in support of biomedical research.

Iraqi Exports

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has collated about Iraqi exports of (a) dates, (b) wheat and (c) other products. [65385]

Mr. Wilson: Information on Iraqi exports of dates and wheat is not readily available from official sources. The International Monetary Fund has estimated from partner country records that Iraq's total exports of goods in 1997 amounted to US$2,309 million. Exports of Iraqi oil approved by the United Nations are monitored by the UN.

Medical Exports

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people are employed by Government departments and agencies to assist in supporting and promoting exports of medical and pharmaceutical equipment; and at what cost. [66037]

Mr. Wilson: Principal responsibility for promoting exports in this sector rests with three civil servants in the Export Promotion Command of my Department in liaison with five officials from the Department of Health and an Export Promoter seconded from industry. The running cost of the civil servants themselves, excluding the programme budget for which they are responsible, is £254k.

The total cost of the Overseas Trade Service's export promotion programme in 1997–98 was estimated to have been approximately £220 million, of which £165 million was the cost of 824.55 posts in the DTI, 92 staff in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland and FCO staff in 217 overseas posts with commercial sections. Figures indicating the percentage of these resources devoted to promoting exports of medical and pharmaceutical equipment are not available.

German Parcels

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library the Treasury Minute of Approval in respect of the purchase of German Parcels by the Post Office. [66021]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 18 January 1999]: Treasury approval was given in the form of a letter from the then Chief Secretary to the then Secretary of State. In accordance with the normal conventions, it would not be appropriate to publish this letter.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the details of the purchase of German Parcels by the Post Office will be supplied to the Committee of Public Accounts. [66019]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The financial consequences of any investments made by the Post Office will be appropriately reflected in the Post Office annual report and accounts. These will be laid before Parliament in the usual way.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what reasons details of the purchase of German Parcels by the Post Office have not been published. [66023]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 18 January 1999]: A great deal of information is available on the Post Office acquisition of German Parcels. But this is a commercial transaction. The Post Office have advised us that they do not have details of similar acquisitions made by their European post office competitors—details which it would be to their advantage to know. They therefore do not want exact details of their own purchase to be released for reasons of commercial confidentiality. We respect that.

However, the estimated turnover of German Parcels for the current year is around £265 million. A normal core price for such an acquisition might be the annual turnover plus any special assets. The agreed purchase price for German Parcels is in line with this.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what arrangements have been made to enable the National Audit Office to examine the purchase by the Post Office of German Parcels; [66020]

(2) if the Comptroller and Auditor General has given his agreement to the decision not to publish details of the purchase of German Parcels by the Post Office. [66022]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answers 18 January 1999]: Under Schedule 4 of the National Audit Act 1983 the Post Office is specifically exempted from the Comptroller and Auditor General's responsibilities for the examination of the economy, efficiency and effectiveness with which public bodies carry out their functions. Post Office accounts are prepared in accordance with commercial practice and are audited by external auditors appointed by the Secretary of State rather than by the National Audit Office.

However, the National Audit Office, through the Comptroller and Auditor General, has a right under Section 6(1) of the National Audit Act 1983 (as qualified by Section 6(2) of the Act) to examine the DTI's and Treasury's roles in approving the purchase of German Parcels.

Coal Mining Subsidence

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to receive the Coal Authority's fourth report on the administration of the coal mining subsidence damage repair and compensation scheme. [67092]

Mr. Battle: I have now received this report from the Coal Authority and have arranged for copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses today.

Electrical Contracting Industry

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, following the dissolution of the Joint Industry Board for the Electrical Contracting Industry and its voluntary de-registration as a trade union in 1991, a successor body with similar objectives has re-registered as a trade union or registered as an employer's association. [66146]

Mr. Ian McCartney: No. I am not aware that the Joint Industry Board for the Electrical Contracting Industry has been dissolved. No successor body with similar objectives has applied for listing as a trade union or as an employers' association.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Joint Advisory Board for the Electrical Contracting Industry was granted permission by ministers to operate an industry scheme of redundancy payments; and if he will make a statement. [66145]

Mr. Ian McCartney: No. The Joint Industry Board for the Electrical Contracting Industry does, however, operate a Dismissals Procedures Agreement designated by the Secretary of State under S110 of the Employment Rights Act 1996 but that agreement does not cover redundancy payments.

Prepayment Gas Meters

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the percentage of gas consumers in England and Wales who use (a) electronic token, (b) coin and (c) mechanical token prepayment gas meters. [65961]

Mr. Battle: As of September 1998, out of some 19 million domestic gas consumers, the percentage of customers using prepayment gas meters was approximately as follows: (a) electronic token, 7 per cent., (b) coin, 0.5 per cent., (c) mechanical token, less than 0.1 per cent.

London and Bishopsgate Investments

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department is investigating alleged improprieties in the actions of London and Bishopsgate Investments in the late 1980s and early 1990s. [66624]

Mr. Byers: It is not the Department's policy to comment on whether or not it is carrying out an investigation. The right hon. Member refers in his question to

"alleged improprieties in the actions of London and Bishopsgate Investments in the late 1980s and early 1990s".

If the hon. Member has particular information about these alleged improprieties, he should make it available to the Company Law and Investigations Directorate of my Department.

Regional Aid

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the results of his consultations carried out with regions from which regional aid is to be withdrawn. [66141]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 18 January 1999]: No decisions have yet been made on the areas which will be ineligible for regional aid after 1 January 2000. The Government have, however, carried out consultations on the review of Assisted Areas with a range of interested parties.

On the reform of Structural Funds, negotiations with the Commission and Member States are continuing and are likely to do so until March 1999.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the new map for regional selective assistance to be proposed to the European Commission. [66133]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 18 January 1999]: No decisions have yet been made on the areas that will be proposed to the European Commission.

Aerospace Research and Development

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with aerospace companies about the civil aircraft research and development budget; and if he will make a statement on future spending on CARAD. [66260]

Mr. Battle: The Department has maintained a close dialogue with the aerospace industry concerning the support available for civil research which has been provided under the Department's Civil Aircraft Research and Technology Demonstration (CARAD) programme. Detailed allocations for all DTI budgets, including CARAD, have yet to be made.

Industrial Energy Taxes

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the meeting between EC Competition Commissioner Karel Van Miert and the German Finance Minister, Oskar Lafontaine on 7 January, on the proposals of the German presidency relating to the introduction of industrial energy taxes. [66423]

Mr. Battle: The meeting was to discuss domestic issues relevant to Germany alone. It is not for me to comment on these.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what renewable energy schemes in the United Kingdom have been part or fully funded by (a) European Community energy programmes and (b) the European Investment Bank. [66622]

Mr. Battle: In the four year period 1995 to 1998, the European Community THERMIE Programme offered support to twenty two projects concerning renewable energy plant in the United Kingdom.

The European Community JOULE programme has supported a large number of renewable energy research and development projects. JOULE projects are collaborative with the results shared between partners in different Member States. The ALTENER programme focuses on projects promoting renewable energy, for example the dissemination of information, developing financial instruments and training. ALTENER projects are collaborative with an emphasis on the wide dissemination of project results. Information about JOULE and THERMIE projects can be found on the CORDIS database, accessed through the World Wide Web. The address is: http://www.cordis.lu/. The ALTENER home page address is: http://europa.eu.int/en/comm/dg17/altener.htm.

The European Investment Bank has supported three renewable energy projects in the United Kingdom, all waste to energy plants.

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures his Department is taking to promote domestic renewable energy expertise to overseas markets; and if he will make a statement. [66619]

Mr. Battle: My Department assists British renewable energy companies to win export orders worldwide, and has had a focused programme of activities including, trade missions, overseas seminars and exhibitions, inward visits, market research and information dissemination. This programme is supported by two dedicated Trade Promoters, who have been concentrating their efforts on target markets such as China, India and Spain. For example, last autumn the Minister for Science opened a renewable energy seminar, and associated trade mission, in Peking. We also take advantage of other opportunities in overseas markets, which in the past year have included, Poland, United States and the Philippines.

British renewable energy exports are estimated to have risen from an historic level of £10–15 million p.a. in the early 90's to around £80–100 million p.a. in the last two years.

Multinationals (OECD Guidelines)

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to participate in updating, expanding and promoting the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development's guidelines for multinational enterprises. [65978]

Mr. Wilson: The Government have been taking an active part in the current review of the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises which began last June. In preparing our positions on the issues addressed by the Guidelines, this Department has consulted widely with other Government Departments and with business, trade unions and interested NGOs. We will seek to modernise and strengthen the Guidelines to reflect more recent developments, particularly in the labour and environment areas and, together with all stakeholders, will explore ways of increasing awareness and encouraging adherence.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cracks have appeared in nuclear power stations in each of the last 20 years; and how many have been repaired. [65744]

Mr. Battle: Arrangements under nuclear site licences require the licensees to notify the Health and Safety Executive's Nuclear Safety Directorate (NSD) of the discovery of any cracks which might challenge their current safety case; some of these may have potential structural significance. Nuclear power stations, like all engineering structures, may also contain many structurally insignificant cracks, so the information is not available in the exact form requested.

Few of the many cracks identified over the years in nuclear power plants have been judged structurally significant and so necessitated repair. Examples of cracks that have necessitated repair are those found in Magnox coolant ducts during the 1980s, cracks in AGR steam headers and pipework and cracks in the boiler shells at Sizewell A power station. Details of these have been made publicly available via either the HSE's publication of the results of NSD's reviews of the licensees' Periodic Safety Reviews (PSRs) or in quarterly NSD reports over the years to local liaison committees.

Further operation of any plant in which a potentially significant crack has been detected is not permitted until the licensee has provided a written safety case that demonstrates it would be safe and NSD has agreed to it. If repairs are necessary to enable a satisfactory safety case to be made, these must be made to the appropriate nuclear standard before NSD allows the operation of the plant to recommence.

Inward Investment

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) which Minister has primary responsibility for ensuring that England, Scotland and Wales do not compete against one another for inward investment; [66137]

(2) what roles the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales and he play in encouraging inward investment in England, Scotland and Wales; [66131]

(3) when details of the Concordat on Inward Investment will be published. [66152]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The Invest in Britain Bureau—which is jointly managed by the Department of Trade and Industry and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office—is the national agency promoting the UK as the number one location for inward investment in Europe. It works in partnership, under the Committee on Overseas Promotion arrangements, with the inward investment agencies of Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland and the English regions.

There is no question of one Minister having primary responsibility for ensuring that competition between different parts of the UK is not wasteful. All Ministers have a collective interest in ensuring that offers of financial assistance represent value for money for the taxpayer.

The Government will be strengthening the current arrangements through a Concordat on financial assistance to industry. The Government expect that they will be in a position to publish the Concordat soon.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Higher Education

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many full-time students, normally domiciled in the Northern Ireland Western Education and Library Board area, enrolled in higher education courses for the current academic year. [65309]

Mr. McFall: This information is not available in the form requested. However, 2,534 full-time students domiciled in the area of the Western Education and Library Board applied for financial support to attend higher education courses in the current academic year.

Clifton Special Care School, Bangor

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many students are enrolled at Clifton Special Care School, Bangor; if a nurse is available in the school; and if she will make a statement. [65960]

Mr. McFall: 98 pupils are currently enrolled at Clifton Special School. At present there is no nurse available in Clifton School, but the Eastern Health and Social Services Board and Ulster Community and Hospitals Trust are working with the South Eastern Education and Library Board to arrange provision of the required level of nursing support.

Retired Teachers (Returnees)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate she has made of the number of retired teachers who subsequently returned to teach for limited periods in primary schools for the most recent 12 month period for which figures are available; and if she will make a statement about opportunities for recently trained teachers. [65959]

Mr. McFall: 673 retired teachers were re-employed in primary schools on a temporary basis during the 1997–98 school year.

The Department of Education has advised employing authorities and schools that, wherever possible, preference should be given to newly qualified teachers or experienced teachers seeking to return to employment, when filling vacancies, including those of a temporary nature.

In the year after qualification, the vast majority of around 650 teachers who qualify each year should obtain teaching posts. For example, a total of only 11 primary and secondary school teachers of age 24 years or under were registered as unemployed for more than 6 months at the end of the 1997–98 school year.

Ulster Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals

Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how she intends to fund the costs incurred by the Ulster Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals in caring for the dangerous wild animals that were taken into their care on behalf of public agencies, from Seskinore, Co. Tyrone, on 8 November 1997. [67440]

Marjorie Mowlam: Costs incurred by the USPCA in caring for these animals until ownership formally passed to the Society on 26 October 1998 amount to £54,329. It is proposed to share these costs on an equal three way basis across the budgets for the Police Authority for Northern Ireland and the Departments of Agriculture and Environment for Northern Ireland. Parliament's approval to meet these costs in the current year will be sought in a Supplementary estimate for Department of the Environment Vote 4 (Environment and other Services). Pending that approval, payment will be made from repayable advances from the Northern Ireland Consolidated Fund.

SCOTLAND

NHSnet

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which NHS trusts and health boards are currently connected to the NHSnet; when he expects every NHS trust and health board to have a link to the NHSnet; what future resources will be required to (a) complete and (b) support this service; and what resources have been allocated to this project (i) this year and (ii) in each of the next three financial years. [65762]

Mr. Galbraith: All Health Boards and NHS Trusts will be linked to NHSnet by 31 March 1999. The current position of Health Boards and NHS Trusts is set out in the table. Resources allocated to this project in this year are £6 million. The ongoing costs of supporting these links will be met by the Health Boards and Trusts.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if full use of the NHSnet requires (a) GP practices and (b) NHS trusts connected to the NHSnet to have compatible software and hardware; and which companies have supplied the hardware and software for the project. [65763]

Mr. Galbraith: NHSnet provides a UK-wide secure private telecommunications network for NHS Organisations across the UK under contracts with BT, BT Syntegra and Cable and Wireless. Connection to NHSnet is achieved by connecting to a Service Access Point on the NHSnet. NHS organisations can either connect directly to an NHSnet Service Access Point or indirectly if they are already linked to a network, e.g. a private Health Board wide network, with a gateway connection to NHSnet. All networks (whether single GP Practices or Board level private networks) connecting to NHSnet must conform to the NHSnet Code of Connection which maintains the security and integrity of NHSnet.

Full use of NHSnet requires each GP Practice and NHS Trust (or the local network to which they belong) to meet published standards for NHSnet which comply with the Internet suite protocols (IP). GP Practices and NHS Trusts must therefore have systems which are compatible with NHSnet (but not necessarily the same as each other). A variety of suppliers will have supplied parts of the overall network; details of these are not held centrally.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects all GP practices in Scotland to have a link to the NHSnet; what resources have been allocated to this project (a) this year and (b) in each of the next three financial years; what resources will be required to (i) complete and (ii) support this service; and what is the estimated cost saving over the next five years. [65760]

Mr. Galbraith: 97 per cent. of GP practices are already connected and the remaining practices which asked to participate will be linked by March 1999. The total cost of this project was £7 million of which £0.415 million was spent in 1998–99. Resources required for ongoing support of the installed systems and NHSnet connections will be met through the usual arrangements between Health Boards and GPs for reimbursement of expenses.

It is difficult at this stage to estimate the cost saving when the system is fully utilised. The main objective is to improve patient care through ensuring that clinicians have access to the information they need to care for patients wherever they are in the NHSiS. The benefits expected when the full infrastructure is put into place also include savings in costs and reductions in the bureaucracy of sending an estimated 10 million paper forms around the system each year, saving in staff time, and improved convenience for patients.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many and what percentage of GP practices are currently connected to the NHSnet. [65761]

Mr. Galbraith: My most recent information is that 1,040 GP Practices are now connected to the NHSnet. This represents 97 per cent. of all practices in Scotland. Of the remaining 34 practices, 9 practices did not ask to participate and the remainder will be linked by March.

Psychiatrists (Young People)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many child psychiatrists are currently employed in the NHS in Scotland. [65879]

Mr. Galbraith: The number of consultant child and adolescent psychiatrists employed in the NHS in Scotland at 30 September 1998 was as follows:

Whole time equivalent: 41.3

Headcount: 48

Notes:

1. Data available do not distinguish between staff working in child psychiatry and adolescent psychiatry.
2. Information on junior staff not yet available for 1998.
3. Consultant data for 30 September 1998 are the latest available and are provisional.

Source:

Information and Statistics Division Scotland.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the availability of psychiatric services for young people, with particular reference to rural areas. [65878]

Mr. Galbraith: Within the context of their mental health strategies, all Health Boards in Scotland are determining and putting in place the appropriate levels of in-patient and community-based provision they require to meet assessed needs for child and adolescent psychiatric care.

The growth of community-based psychiatric services should help promote better access for young people in rural areas. But, inevitably, in-patient facilities will tend to be close to population centres. Health Boards covering rural areas should take account of this in developing their plans.

Quigley Committee

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will state the terms of reference of the Quigley Committee on higher education; and when he expects it to report; [65476]

(2) if he will make a statement on the interim findings of the Quigley Committee on student applications. [65475]

Mrs. Liddell: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on 1 December 1998, Official Report, column 138.

The Quigley Committee has not made any statement of interim findings.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

New Deal

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list those areas for which (a) the New Deal Gateway and (b) one or more New Deal options are delivered entirely by private sector providers; and if he will list monthly expenditure and client outcomes for each of these private sector providers up to the latest date for which the figures are available. [63275]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 14 December 1998]: There are no areas where the New Deal Gateway is delivered entirely by private sector providers although in ten Units of Delivery the New Deal is private sector led. These are: Leicester, Colchester, West Lancashire, Exeter and East Devon, South Humber, North Tyneside, Forth Valley, Hackney and City, Solihull and Bridgend. Client outcomes for these are shown in the table. These figures are GSS from January to October 1998 and provisional Management Information for November 1998.

	Unsubsidised placings	Number joining the Employment Option
Leicester	413	27
Colchester	376	19
West Lancashire	84	12
Exeter and Devon	234	32
South Humber	539	4
North Tyneside	130	42
Forth Valley	226	66
Hackney and City	460	35
Solihull	93	19
Bridgend	317	151

Whilst I am unable, for reasons of commercial confidentiality, to provide details of payments to individual contractors, we will be reporting later this year on the overall financial performance of all Units of Delivery, including these ten private sector led areas as part of our continuous improvement agenda. This will include as a core performance measure the unit cost of placing a New Deal client into a job in each of the Units of Delivery.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people have entered the New Deal Gateway in the Unit of Delivery covering Havant Borough Council area since its inception; and how many took up each New Deal option. [66367]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The latest Government Statistical Service figures for the Portsmouth and South East Hampshire Unit of Delivery, which covers Havant, show that to the end of October 1998 (a) 1,229 young people had entered the Gateway and 217 had secured unsubsidised employment (b) 307 had joined one of the four options: 49 on the Employment option; 35 on the Voluntary Sector option; 10 on the Environment Task Force; and 213 on the Full-Time Education and Training option. 506 young people were still at the initial stage of New Deal support through Gateway, 32 had left New Deal to claim other benefits, 33 had gone to other known destinations and 134 had gone to unknown destinations.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people have entered the New Deal Gateway in the Unit of Delivery covering the New Forest District Council area since its inception; and how many took up each New Deal option. [66368]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The latest Government Statistical Service figures for the Southampton and South West Hampshire Unit of Delivery, which covers the New Forest, show that to the end of October 1998 (a) 820 young people had entered the Gateway and 162 had secured unsubsidised employment (b) 178 had joined one of the four options: 37 on the Employment option; 25 on the Voluntary Sector option; 18 on the Environment Task Force; and 98 on the Full-Time Education and Training option. 316 young people were still at the initial stage of New Deal support through Gateway, 27 had left New Deal to claim other benefits, 32 had gone to other known destinations and 105 had gone to unknown destinations.

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many young unemployed people aged 18 to 25 years in Doncaster, Central have to date gained new skills from their participation in the New Deal programme. [66562]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Statistics from the New Deal are not available for individual constituencies.

The latest Government Statistical figures to the end of October 1998, including the provisional Management Information to the end of November 1998, show that for the Wakefield and Doncaster Unit of Delivery, which covers the Doncaster Central area, 3,015 young people aged between 18–24 have already entered the New Deal Gateway. 961 young people have joined one of the four options and each participant on a New Deal option will work towards an NVQ or equivalent qualification which will assist them in gaining a new skill and increasing their prospects for sustainable employment.

Outdoor Education

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received on the subject of outdoor education; what changes he proposes to make in the provision and funding of such education; and if he will make a statement. [66485]

Ms Estelle Morris: Under the new maintained school funding system which takes effect from April 1999, local education authorities will be able to retain funding centrally to support outdoor education centres, as they have been able to do under present arrangements for Local Management of Schools. This reflects representations from Local Education Authorities and others following the publication last year of the consultation paper "Fair Funding".

The Government is also committed to increasing the range of opportunities that young people have to take part in learning activities outside school hours. To this end, we are making £180 million of Lottery money available across the UK through the New Opportunities Fund to support such activities. The draft application guidance produced by the New Opportunities Fund includes adventurous outdoor activities among those which may be eligible for funding. The New Opportunities Fund will be formally inviting applications later in the Spring.

School Performance

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what conclusions he has drawn from his Department's internal investigations of the relationship between socio-economic factors and school performance; and if he will place a copy of results of these investigations in the Library. [66602]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 20 January 1999]: Historically, there has been a strong statistical relationship between socio-economic factors and school performance. This does not mean, however, that poverty can be used to excuse poor results.

The Autumn Package of performance data, which was distributed in November last year, contains detailed information on national results and the performance of schools within similar bands of Free School Meals. The Package shows what is possible: many schools in the highest Free School Meals band can be seen to perform better than some of the schools in the lowest band.

The Government are committed to raising standards in all schools. For example, we are ensuring that successful schools better share good practice. The beacon school initiative and the new Standards Site on the Internet encourage and enable schools to learn about "what works", regardless of the socio-economic context in which individual schools are located.

We have placed a copy of the Autumn Package in the Library. It is also available via the Internet. The address is: http://www.standards.dfee.gov.uk/library/publications.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what plans he has to introduce quality assurance procedures within Section 11-funded adult education; [66608]

(2) what guidance he has issued to local education authorities relating to the means by which existing Section 11-funded adult education will be protected following the introduction of ethnic minority achievement grants; [66610]

(3) if he will ensure that, within the new administrative arrangements for ethnic minority achievement grants, the level of existing funding of adult education within each participating local education authority is ring-fenced before the retained and devolved proportions of the authority's allocations are set. [66609]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department's letter of 12 November 1998 to Chief Education Officers set out details of the new Standards Fund Ethnic Minority Achievement Grant. Subject to the receipt of good action plans, local education authorities will receive broadly the same allocations for the support of ethnic minority education in 1999–2000 as the Home Office provided under section 11 in 1998–99, including that element for adult education.

The Department's letter also set out the arrangements whereby up to 15 per cent. of allocations, or £150,000 whichever was the greater, might be held back to provide central services including adult education. This should be satisfactory for the vast majority of Authorities. However, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will consider carefully, and on their merits, any cases which an Authority might make reflecting historically heavy investment in adult education.

LEAs are required to ensure that all Standards Fund grants are spent for the purpose for which they are paid and to monitor the quality of provision. In addition, the Department monitors and evaluates all Standards Fund expenditure.

Teachers (Unfair Discrimination)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to the letter of 27 August (EM CC/614/2044) to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, what interim results he has received in respect of the non-statutory code of practice on unfair discrimination on grounds of age in the teaching profession. [65404]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The draft Code of Practice we have been developing with key external partners was published for wider consultation, including amongst those with responsibilities for the employment of teachers, in November 1998. We were very pleased with the wide interest the Code prompted, with over 9,000 copies being distributed. The consultation ended on 8 January 1999 and we are currently analysing the responses. The analysis will be published in due course and the final version of the Code will be launched in the Spring.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, pursuant to the answer given to the right hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 12 January 1999, Official Report, column 152, he will state (a) the assumptions about the growth of the minimum income guarantee relative to prices and earnings and (b) the number and proportion of state second pensioners who will be receiving the pensioners' minimum income guarantee in the years up to 2050. [66469]

Mr. Timms: Information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

It is assumed that, from the announced rates for April 1999, the Minimum Income Guarantee is uprated in line with the growth in average earnings (assumed to be 1.5 per cent. per year more than the growth in prices).

Estimates are not available of the number of pensioners who would be receiving payments of state second pension in future years. Overall, estimates taken from the PENSIM model suggest that under the new insurance contract for pensions approximately 1 in 4 pensioner units (2.5 million) would receive income from the Minimum Income Guarantee in 2050, and a lower proportion in years after 2050.

Projections forward to the year 2050 are subject to a high degree of uncertainty, given the number of assumptions in making them. Some of those who will be pensioners in 2050 have yet to begin work, and most are today in their 20s and 30s.

Estimates made by extrapolating projections from the PENSIM model can give only a broad indication of the likely order of magnitude of figures so far into the future.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the savings in income support or minimum pensioner income guarantee payments each year after 1 April 1999 till 1 April 2007 arising from the introduction of pensions splitting. [66462]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

Legislation to enable pensions to be shared at the time of divorce will be included in the forthcoming Welfare Reform Bill.

The financial implications of pension sharing are uncertain, and will depend on the number of spouses who obtain a pension share and the percentage of pension which is transferred. Current estimates are based on the assumption that there could be from 35,000 to 65,000 cases per year, with a central assumption of 50,000. All estimates made are also dependent on a large number of other assumptions and should be considered illustrative.

It is expected that any impact on the minimum income guarantee will initially be small, as income support entitlement will not be altered until a pension share comes into payment. As most divorces take place before the age of 40, it is likely that, in most cases, there will be a significant time lapse between a pension share being made and income being received from the pension. Broad estimates of the impact 20 years after implementation suggest that, using the central assumption of 50,000 pension shares per year, pension sharing on divorce could lead to a saving on all income related benefits of around £10 million (within a range of £0—£30 million using alternative assumptions).

Social Fund

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will extend Direction 25 of the Social Fund to include 16 to 18-year-olds who are on a youth training placement. [66156]

Angela Eagle: It is not appropriate to extend Direction 25 to include 16–18 year olds on youth training placements. Payments from the Discretionary Social Fund are made from a cash limited budget and available resources must be targeted on those most in need of help. Eligibility for Social Fund Community Care Grants is therefore restricted by Direction 25 to those entitled to Income Support or income based Jobseeker's Allowance.

Provision already exists to allow vulnerable 16–17 year olds to receive Income Support and income-based Jobseeker's Allowance and, in turn, access to Community Care Grants.

Disabled People

Mr. Osten: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library a copy of the responses his Department has received following the consultation process for the paper, "A New Contract for Welfare: Support for Disabled People". [66828]

Mr. Bayley: I refer the hon. Member to the Written Answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Salford (Ms Blears) on 19 January 1999, Official Report, column 402.

DEFENCE

Portsmouth Naval Base

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evaluation he has made of the use of space and the state of the equipment in COB2 building at the Portsmouth Naval Base. [66178]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Naval Bases and Supply Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. A. Trewby to Mr. Michael Hancock, dated 21 January 1999:

The Secretary of State for Defence has asked me to reply to your Question on what evaluation he has made of the use of space and the state of the equipment in Central Office Block 2 (COB2) building at HM Naval Base Portsmouth, as this falls within my areas of responsibility.

COB2 is an office administration building. A study was completed in 1997 which showed that the building's usage conformed with Departmental Standards for space utilisation. The equipment in the building compromises of normal office equipment, ie. computers, telephones, and service equipment such as lifts and lights. These are regularly maintained and updated as requirements demand.

Submarines

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the displacement of the Vanguard class of submarines. [66172]

Mr. Spellar: The displacement of Vanguard class submarines, when submerged, is about 16,000 tons.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the anticipated hull life of the Trafalgar class of submarines. [66667]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The initial design life of Trafalgar class submarine hulls was 25 years, although there is sufficient margin to extend the life of the submarines as necessary, subject to monitoring to ensure the continuing safety of the submarines.

Project Horizon Ships

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the expected average time between major refits for Project Horizon ships. [66665]

Mr. Spellar: The maintenance philosophy for CNGF is based on a continuous process of repair and update. It is expected that the length of upkeep periods will be reduced, scheduled maintenance will be minimised, and the docking period will be extended to five years. There will be no major refits, but there will be four docking periods, of six months each, at five year intervals during the planned 25 year life of the ship.

Commercial Lobbyists

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what rules or guidance his Department has to govern the (a) formal and (b) informal interaction between his civil servants and commercial lobbyists. [66204]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 27 July 1998, Official Report, column 4, to my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice).

Uranium

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations his Department has received requesting the use of its uranium stocks for cancer research, with particular reference to the detection and treatment of cancer; what response his Department gave; and what factors underlay this response. [66487]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 19 January 1999]: The Department of Trade and Industry asked my Department last year if we could provide highly enriched uranium, HEU, from defence stocks for use by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (UKAEA) to produce medical radioisotopes.

UK defence requirements for HEU were considered in detail in the Strategic Defence Review, which concluded that any material not required for nuclear weapons purposes would be needed for the nuclear propulsion programme. Therefore, as we stated in the Strategic Defence Review (SDR) White Paper, the MOD holds no surplus stocks of HEU. We were, as a result unable to accede to the Department of Trade and Industry's request. We were, however, able to provide advice on a possible alternative source of HEU.

Codes of Conduct

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when he intends to publish a revised code of conduct on ethics and discipline for the Royal Air Force; [66746]

(2) when he intends to publish a revised code of conduct on ethics and discipline for the Army; [66747]

(3) when he intends to publish a revised code of conduct on ethics and discipline for the Royal Navy. [66748]

Mr. Doug Henderson: As I explained in my previous answer on 14 January 1999, Official Report, column 269, each of the Services has its own procedure for providing information and guidance on matters relating to conduct and discipline within its individual Service environment. The Army and the Royal Air Force are currently revising and updating their current codes of conduct. When this work is complete, I will write the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

There are no immediate plans to publish a revised code of conduct for the Royal Navy.

Outstanding Compensation Cases

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many outstanding legal cases are pending against his Department on grounds of (a) equal opportunities, (b) racial discrimination, (c) homosexuality and lesbianism, (d) post-traumatic stress syndrome and (e) physical injury. [66743]

Mr. Spellar: The available information requested relating to the number of outstanding compensation cases being pursued against my Department, whether in litigation or not, by employees, former employees and members of the public as at 20 January 1999 is set out:

	Number
(a) Sex discrimination, sexual harassment and equal pay claims submitted by Service and former Service personnel to Employment Tribunals	[1]38
(b) Racial discrimination and harassment claims submitted by Service and former Service personnel to Employment Tribunals	[1]16
(c) Homosexuality and lesbianism cases submitted by Service and former Service personnel to Employment Tribunals	[1]72
(d) Post-traumatic stress disorder	155
(e) Physical injury	[2]3,716

[1] These figures exclude claims from MOD civilian and former civilian staff as the information is not held centrally.
[2] This figure excludes personal injury claims from members of the public being handled by MOD claims officers overseas as the information is not held centrally. Medical negligence claims and third party personal injury claims relating to road traffic accidents have also been excluded. Claims in respect of disease (e.g. asbestosis, mesothelioma) have been included but claims relating to psychiatric illness have been excluded.

HMS Invincible

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the interval between major refits for HMS Invincible. [66666]

Mr. Doug Henderson: HMS Invincible has undergone one refit. It took place some six years after she entered service with the Royal Navy.

RAF Manston, Kent

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what occasions RAF Manston, Kent, has been used by private freight aircraft in (a) 1997 and (b) 1998; what cargo they carried; and if he will make a statement. [66629]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 20 January 1999]: My Department does not record the information requested. Kent International Airport (KIA), a private company, operates from an enclave of leased land within the airfield site of RAF Manston and is responsible for all flight planning, acceptance of aircraft movements, handling and refuelling, loading and unloading.

Chief of Defence Personnel

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to establish the post of Chief of Defence Personnel. [66744]

Mr. George Robertson: I have no current plans to establish a post of Chief of Defence Personnel.

Territorial Army

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the net effect of the review of the Territorial Army on the number of (a) TA centres and (b) TA units in North Wales. [66017]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Prior to the Strategic Defence Review there were seven Territorial Army Centres and five Territorial Army company-sized units in North Wales, plus a battalion Headquarters. As a result of the re-structuring there will be five Territorial Army Centres and four Territorial Army company-sized Units, plus a battalion Headquarters.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the strength of the TA prior to the Strategic Defence Review will remain after implementation of the Strategic Defence Review in (a) the North West of England and (b) North Wales. [65023]

Mr. Doug Henderson: 75 per cent. of TA strength will remain in the North West after the implementation of the findings of the Strategic Defence Review. 72 per cent. will remain in North Wales.

Atomic Test Veterans

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will commission a re-assessment of the work of Dr Sue Rabbitt Roff, at the centre for medical education at Dundee University, on the causation of cancers in British atomic test veterans. [66431]

Mr. Spellar: No. My Department has made clear on a number of occasions its reservations about the work of Ms Rabbitt Roff and the conclusions reached. Nevertheless, consideration is being given to researching further the incidence of multiple myeloma among our nuclear test veterans and we have asked Ms Rabbitt Roff for access to her data. Any such research will be carried out by the National Radiological Protection Board but the results, which would be subject to external peer review, would be unlikely to be available until the latter half of next year.

101 Battalion REME (Chorley)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations his Department had with North West and Isle of Man TAVRA on the move of HQ 101 Battalion REME from Chorley to Queensferry. [65012]

Mr. Doug Henderson: North West and Isle of Man TAVRA were consulted on the move of Headquarters 101 Battalion REME from Chorley to Queensferry during the consultation process which took place at Headquarters Land Command in October.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 December 1998, Official Report, column 54, concerning the cost of transferring 101 REME Battalion HQ, if he will define significant financial costs. [65016]

Mr. Doug Henderson: These are costs of an order likely to influence the decision to relocate the unit.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Dome (Sponsorship)

36. Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the total amount of sponsorship which he forecasts will be available for the Dome. [65228]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company's target is to raise £150 million of sponsorship support. The Company announced, last November, confirmed sponsorship of £120 million—or 80 per cent. of that total. The NMEC are in detailed negotiations for a further £15 million.

Festival Fund

37. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will ensure that there is sufficient help and advice from the millennium festival on funding applications for regional and local events and activities to the Millennium Festival fund. [65229]

Janet Anderson: The Millennium Festival is a partnership initiative between the Lottery Distribution bodies in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland and the New Millennium Experience Company. It aims to give as many people as possible financial and other support for events and activities within their communities during 2000. Promotional and administrative support for the Festival is provided by NMEC's twelve country-wide offices. Staff in those offices are available to advise anyone who is interested in the Millennium Festival and I have today placed contact details in the Libraries of the House.

The funding round for larger awards—over £5,000—which opened on 5 May 1998 has now closed. Decisions on the Awards will be announced in February 1999. The funding round for smaller community schemes—seeking between £250 and £5,000—will open in the spring of 1999.

Ferry Passengers

38. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the number of people who will travel to the Millennium Dome by ferry. [65230]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company estimates that about 1 million out of the estimated 12 million visitors to the Dome will arrive by boat from central London and by the shuttle service from historic Greenwich.

Visitors

40. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the maximum number of visitors which the millennium site could handle on any one day. [65232]

Janet Anderson: Actual daily numbers will depend on the New Millennium Experience Company's policy regarding the number of tickets on sale for each day, on visitor safety and comfort, and on necessary approvals from the relevant authorities. The present estimate is for a maximum of 35,000 on those occasions when the Millennium Experience opens during daytime; on those occasions where the Millennium Experience is open during the daytime and the evening, the number of visitors is estimated at 55,000.

42. Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his most recent estimate of the number of daily visitors to the dome and the proportion of the visitors who will arrive by underground train service. [65234]

Janet Anderson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 21 January 1999, Official Report, column 532. The number of visitors estimated to arrive at the Dome site by underground train is about 55 per cent.

National Lottery

41. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proportion of the total public and national lottery expenditure on the millennium celebrations will be spent on the dome at Greenwich. [65233]

Janet Anderson: The Millennium Commission has awarded a grant of £449 million (gross) to the Millennium Experience project, which incorporates the Dome at Greenwich and a linked comprehensive programme of events and activities around the country. This represents 20 per cent. of the Millennium Commission's total funds. The remaining 80 per cent. has been distributed to a wide range of projects around the UK. The New Millennium Experience Company has received, and will receive, no public funds from the Exchequer for the project.

Sponsorship

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent representations he has received on sponsorship of the Millennium Experience. [65231]

Janet Anderson: As shareholder of the New Millennium Experience Company, my right hon. Friend the Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson), the former Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, received many representations from members of the public and from Members of this House about all aspects of the Millennium Experience project, including sponsorship.

Millennium Landmark Projects

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much money has been paid out to date for each of the Millennium Landmark projects. [66672]

Mr. Chris Smith: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall write to the hon. Member in my capacity as Chairman of the Commission and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Commercial Lobbyists

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what rules or guidance his Department has to govern the (a) formal and (b) informal interaction between his civil servants and commercial lobbyists. [66208]

Mr. Chris Smith: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 27 July 1998, Official Report, column 4, to my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice).

Hotels (Rating System)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what account is given of value for money in the accreditation of crowns on a quality rating system for hotels. [66896]

Janet Anderson: Rating assessments under both the English Tourist Board's current crown scheme and the new harmonised accommodation rating scheme are made on the range of facilities and level of services appropriate to each type of accommodation and not specifically on their value for money. Under the new harmonised scheme for serviced accommodation in England, hotels are given a rating of 1 to 5 stars covering the whole visitor experience (e.g. quality, level of services and range of facilities) and guest accommodation is rated entirely on quality, using 1 to 5 diamonds. The ETB, the AA and the RAC are currently carrying out inspections against the new harmonised scheme, which will be launched to customers later this year.

Tourism (North West)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will estimate the annual revenue of the tourism industry in the North West for the last five years. [66898]

Janet Anderson: Estimated figures for annual expenditure in the North West Tourist Board region from 1993 to 1997 by tourists from the UK staying at least one night and by tourists from overseas are shown in the table. Figures for spending by UK residents on tourism day visits to the North West Tourist Board region are available only for 1996 and show an estimated £2,800 million for that year (Source: the UK Day Visits Survey).

Janet Anderson [holding answer 18 January 1999]: My Department has made no specific assessment of the North West Tourist Board, which, like the other regional tourist boards, is an independent commercial organisation. However, I fully recognise the important work that the Board does to promote, develop and raise the profile of tourism in its region. I am pleased to say that I am opening the Great Days Out Fair in Bolton on 20 February.

Football Task Force

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will extend the terms of reference of the Football Task Force to allow it to investigate the administration of professional football. [65061]

Mr. Banks: I expect the governing bodies to address issues relating to the administration of professional football and I urge them to take an early opportunity to review current structures and procedures. The Football Task Force has provided valuable advice in a number of reports and I will give careful consideration to any arrangements that may follow the conclusion of its original remit.

Friend the Member for Gateshead, East and Washington, West (Ms Quin), called on the Yemeni Ambassador on 1 January.

Ms Quin [holding answer 19 January 1999]: This situation remains under review. The deployment of a fisheries protection vessel, to aid in calming the situation in British waters around Gibraltar, remains one of a number of options we are considering.

Chechnya

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) when the British Embassy in Moscow learnt of the Interfax report of 6 December 1998 that a rescue attempt was to be made to release the hostages in Chechnya, employed by Granger Telecom; [66958]

(2) when his Department in London learned of the BBC World Service report from the Caversham Monitoring Service that Interfax had reported that a rescue attempt was to be made to release the hostages in Chechnya employed by Granger Telecom. [66959]

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the advice he has placed in the Library in respect of people travelling to Chechnya was issued to individual visa applicants employed by Granger Telecom or was issued to the company that employed them. [66960]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The FCO travel advice for Russia, now in the Library, was shown to Granger Telecom management at a meeting with FCO officials on 21 August 1998. Granger Telecom have confirmed to FCO officials that, as a result of that meeting and the advice given, Granger management re-consulted their staff about their willingness to work in Chechnya. The FCO was not made aware of individual visa applications to the Russian Embassy.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the advice given to travellers visiting Chechnya is the same as that given to people intending to work there. [66961]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Since 7 December 1994, we have advised British nationals not to travel to Chechnya. The travel advice is the same for visiting travellers and for British people intending to work there.

Iran

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what requests he has received from the Government of Iran for compensation for a stray missile which landed in or near the Iranian city of Khorramshahr. [65400]

Mr. Fatchett: We have received a request for compensation from the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran in respect of a stray missile that landed in or near the town of Khorramshahr.

No missiles were fired by UK forces in the course of Operation Desert Fox. Questions relating to the circumstances of individual missile attacks and any subsequent claims for compensation are therefore a question for the US authorities.

[66393]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Overseas Telephone Calls

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee if he will list the (a) average annual expenditure on overseas telephone calls per hon. Member and (b) greatest amount spent by an hon. Member in each of the last three years for which information is available; and what the annual administrative cost is of collecting payment for these calls. [66567]

Mr. Allan: The average annual expenditure for hon. Members for overseas calls for 1998 was £29.31. The greatest amount spent by an hon. Member in the preceding three years is £127.31 (1996), £403.51 (1997) and £1,289.90 (1998). The annual administrative cost of collecting payment for these calls is estimated to be £13,000 (excluding any administrative costs incurred by the Member).

PRIME MINISTER

Cross-party Co-operation

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the advantages and disadvantages of involving hon. Members from the Liberal Democrat Party in the development of Government policy on matters relating to access to the countryside. [66404]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 18 January 1999]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 20 January 1999, Official Report, columns 483–84.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his letter of 13 January to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, what was the outcome of discussions with (a) EU partners and (b) Security Council colleagues about making more effective arrangements for alleviating the suffering of the Iraqi people. [66491]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 January 1999]: Discussions are still continuing with EU partners on all aspects of Iraq policy, including ways to alleviate the suffering of the Iraqi people, on which we have made a number of proposals to the Presidency. The General Affairs Council will consider these matters further on 25 January. Following discussions in the Security Council on 14 January, the President of the Council reported that members had discussed the need to improve the humanitarian programme and looked forward to a full report from the UN Secretary General on how this might be achieved.

However, it is important that these issues are put into context. Saddam Hussein has proven time and again that he is not prepared to provide adequately for his people's welfare. He has refused shipments of humanitarian aid, prevaricated over distribution plans for the "oil for food" programme, smuggled oil illegally out of Iraq for his own benefit and tried to sell wheat and barley to other countries at low prices, while complaining that his people are starving. The UN Special Rapporteur holds Baghdad responsible for the precarious food and health situation in Iraq. We are determined to do what we can to ease the suffering of the Iraqi people in the face of such neglect by their leader.

Government Agencies

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy that Government agencies which choose not to pay costs ordered by a court at the end of a case must report the detailed circumstances and the reasons for any refusal to his office. [66872]

The Prime Minister: Government agencies are bound by Orders of the Court in the same way as any other litigant and have the same remedies available to them. Where they are aggrieved by an Order or are advised that the Order was incorrectly made, their remedy is to appeal against the Order or to apply to the Court to have the Order set aside. Otherwise, they must obey the Order.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Package Holidays

6. Ann Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made in improving protection for consumers buying package holidays. [65195]

Dr. Howells: Overall, the Package Travel Regulations 1992 are serving consumers well. Around 30 million holiday and travel packages are sold in this country each year, and produce relatively few problems. However, I am keeping the effectiveness of the Regulations under review and will not hesitate to act if necessary.

The Foreign Package Holidays (Tour Operators and Travel Agents) Order which came into force on 16 November 1998 will help consumers to shop around to get the best deals.

Parental Leave

12. Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he is proposing to provide rights for employees to take parental leave. [65202]

Mr. Ian McCartney: We expect to introduce a Bill shortly which will create the framework for a package of measures implementing our family-friendly employment proposals. All of these measures will help employees to balance work and family life and bring about a culture in the workplace which will support employees wanting to take parental leave. The measures in the Bill will be supported by regulations setting out the detailed provisions.

The package will introduce three months parental leave, enabling fathers, as well as mothers, to play an active role in raising their children and helping to encourage a workplace culture where it is acceptable for them to do so. And the Bill will recognise for the first time, the need for adoptive parents and their children to spend vital time together adjusting to their new circumstances.

Parental leave builds on the maternity leave rights. Women, and their families, will benefit from the extension of basic maternity leave to 18 weeks, and from the reduction in the qualifying period for the longer period of maternity absence.

The new right to time off to deal with family emergencies will allow people to take short-term time off to deal with emergencies without jeopardising their job security. It will apply to all employees and is a significant step which recognises that caring responsibilities may affect people at all stages of their working life.

Libya

13. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on trade with Libya. [65203]

Mr. Wilson: Until we see actual progress in our political relations with Libya, my Department's position remains unchanged. We neither encourage nor discourage trade.

Engineering Industry

14. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to safeguard jobs in the engineering industry; and if he will make a statement. [65204]

Mr. Byers: The slowdown in the world economy will lead to slower growth in the United Kingdom.

We believe that the best way of safeguarding jobs in the long term in the engineering industry is to create a stable and strong monetary and fiscal regime.

Post Office

15. Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his policies for making the Post Office internationally competitive. [65205]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The elements of the Post Office reform package—a combination of market disciplines and commercial freedoms—aimed at transforming the performance of the Post Office and its ability to carry out business both nationally and internationally—are set out in the Statement made by my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on 7 December 1998, Official Report, columns 21–24.

The first fruit of our new policy has been Government approval for the Post Office's first major foreign strategic acquisition. The acquisition of German Parcel will significantly enhance the international parcels capability of the Post Office.

28. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received on the future of the Post Office. [65220]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The statement of this House on the future of the Post Office on 7 December 1998 by my right hon. Friend, the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry followed representations from and consultations with interested parties. These included the Post Office, Post Office Unions, the Post Office Users National Council, the National Federation of Sub-Postmasters, representatives of business users and potential and existing competitors.

We also took full account of the Trade and Industry Select Committee's 1998 Report on the Post Office (HC 380).

Single European Currency

16. Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on literature advising companies on the single European currency issued by his Department. [65206]

Mr. Wilson: The Government have produced a number of publications and specialist information relating to the introduction of the single European currency. The Euro Preparations Unit in HM Treasury has published a series of factsheets to help small and medium businesses prepare for the euro. To supplement this work, DTI has produced leaflets aimed specifically at exporters. My noble Friend, the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe wrote to 1.6 million small and medium companies last year to alert them to the need to prepare for the euro and to the information available from the Government.

Consumer Protection

17. Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his work in protecting the consumers of goods and services in the UK. [65207]

Dr. Howells: We are taking forward a large number of measures aimed at improving the lot of consumers including work on clearer sale of goods rights, giving consumer bodies the right to seek injunctions against the use of unfair contract terms, increased transparency in pricing information by extending unit pricing, giving consumers clear rights when buying by mail order and other distance selling methods and strengthening consumer protection on doorstep selling.

At the same time we are working on a broader consumer strategy aimed at giving consumers a fair deal. It will concentrate on three key areas: ensuring that consumers know their rights and have the information they need to make informed choices and demand their rights; taking rogue traders out of the market; and taking measures to give consumers confidence when shopping on the internet.

South America

18. Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department is taking to maintain and increase exports to South America. [65208]

Mr. Wilson: My Department offers a full range of services to British companies seeking business in South America, including support for trade missions and trade fairs. Opportunities in the markets are extensively promoted throughout the United Kingdom, supported by Ministers, other Government Departments, Export Promoters seconded from the private sector and various private sector multiplier organisations. This is underpinned by visits to the region by various Government Ministers and by visits to this country by both Heads of Government and Ministers from Latin America.

Science (Women)

19. Mrs. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the involvement of women in science. [65209]

Mr. Byers: Women are significantly under-represented in the physical sciences and engineering. Unless we can improve this situation, our industrial and research base will continue to be deprived of access to some of the best potential talent. We are encouraging young women to continue with science through A-levels into higher education, and are seeking to ensure that women can have satisfactory science and engineering-based careers, by encouraging family-friendly practices in both the public and private sectors.

Personal Pensions

20. Ms Stuart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress he has made in his discussions with the Social Security Department in relation to S226 personal pensions being available to trustees in bankruptcy. [65210]

Dr. Howells: Following those discussions the Government issued a Green Paper, "A new contract for welfare: Partnership in Pensions", which proposes that all tax-approved private pension rights should be treated equally on bankruptcy. A subsequent Consultation Paper, "Strengthening the Pensions Framework", set out that proposal in more detail.

We propose that in the future all tax-approved private pension rights should remain with bankrupts and not be available to the trustee in bankruptcy for the benefit of creditors. This will include tax-approved Section 226 Personal Pensions. But as a safeguard against abuse the trustee in bankruptcy will be able to apply for a court to recover any excessive contributions made to the pension scheme.

Regional Competitiveness

21. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has to improve regional competitiveness. [65211]

Mr. Byers: The White Paper, "Our Competitive Future: Building the Knowledge Driven Economy", which was published in December 1998, sets out new proposals to improve regional competitiveness. These include a refocused Regional Selective Assistance, new measures to support the growth of smaller businesses in selected areas, new regional venture capital funds and extra funds for the new Regional Development Agencies in England to address their regional competitiveness needs.

23. Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how he will ensure that his proposals for innovative start-ups from the public sector science and engineering base will enhance competitiveness in regional economies. [65213]

Mr. Byers: The Government are currently setting up new Regional Development Agencies (RDAs) to enhance the competitiveness of the English regions. These will play an important role in encouraging innovation and the exploitation of our knowledge base. The help for innovative start-ups announced in the Competitiveness White Paper will be available through Business Links partnerships which will work closely with national and local partners to ensure the support they deliver meets regional needs.

Venture Capital

22. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he will take to encourage the growth of venture capital in the regions. [65212]

Mr. Byers: I recognise the vital role that venture capital can play in support of growth businesses and the value that the formal venture capital industry adds in making larger investments. I am committed to ensuring that there is also adequate supply of venture capital, in smaller amounts, to meet demand across the regions.

Scientific Discoveries

24. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to encourage commercial development of scientific discoveries. [65214]

Mr. Byers: The commercial exploitation of scientific research is fundamental to a prosperous knowledge-driven economy. The Competitiveness White Paper set out a number of important measures including:

- A new "Reach-out" fund to encourage universities to work more effectively with business;
- A £25 million Science Enterprise Challenge to create up to eight enterprise centres at UK universities;
- Expansion of activities to promote collaborative partnerships and the transfer of knowledge between the science and engineering base and businesses.
- A look at how to make the most of the outputs of Public Sector Research Establishments.

The White Paper announcements build on other activities such as the University Challenge launched last year to help universities turn good research into good business.

Minimum Wage

25. Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received on the national minimum wage. [65215]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government have received a number of recent representations on the national minimum wage, both in response to its consultation on draft national minimum wage regulations and through general correspondence.

27. Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those groups which he plans to exempt from the provisions relating to the minimum wage. [65219]

Mr. Ian McCartney: We have always made it clear that the national minimum wage should have the maximum possible application. The draft minimum wage regulations, upon which we consulted in autumn 1998, provided for the exemption of 16 and 17-year-olds, apprentices under the age of 26 in the first year of their apprenticeship and apprentices aged 18 in any year of their apprenticeship. We have given careful consideration to the responses we received during the consultation exercise and revised regulations will shortly be laid before Parliament.

Sub-post Offices

26. Mrs. Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future of the sub-post office network. [65216]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government remain firmly committed to a network of post offices throughout the country in which sub-post offices will continue to be the key element alongside a core of Post Office owned and managed Crown offices.

Competitiveness White Paper

29. Ms Southworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the Competitiveness White Paper. [65221]

Mr. Byers: My Department has received numerous representations from business and private individuals welcoming the wide-ranging programme to promote business competitiveness set out in the Competitiveness White Paper.

Ministerial Visits

30. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to make an official visit to (a) Brazil and (b) the USA in the next year. [65222]

Mr. Wilson: Proposals for overseas visits by the new Secretary of State, including Brazil, are still under discussion. There are provisional plans for the Secretary of State to visit the US in the Spring of 1999. The visit would be part of a continuing programme, building on the good working relationship we have with many American companies for the strategic alliances and joint ventures.

High-tech Industry

31. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has to improve the competitiveness of British high-tech industry. [65223]

Mr. Byers: The Government set out their agenda for helping to improve the competitiveness of the whole of British industry in the recently published White Paper "Our Competitive Future: Building the Knowledge Driven Economy". In the White Paper, we also recognised the need to look to the future, to those high-tech industries that have strong growth potential. This is why for example, as part of the Enterprise Fund announced in the White Paper, we are working with major financial institutions to set out a national venture capital fund to support very early-stage, high technology businesses. It is also why the Government in partnership with the Wellcome Trust will spend an additional £1.4 billion to modernise the science and engineering base and help fund leading edge research projects.

Interest Rates

32. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from business leaders in the last month on the level of UK interest rates. [65224]

Mr. Byers: Ministers regularly receive representations from business leaders on many aspects of economic performance, including the level of interest rates. Frequently we are told that one of the most important things the Government can do for business is to deliver economic stability. The Government have taken tough and decisive action to secure that much needed stability, including giving independence to the Monetary Policy Committee of the Bank of England over interest rates. We shall support the Monetary Policy Committee in the difficult decisions they have to make.

Postal Service

Ms Blears: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he will take to ensure that postal service users pay an affordable, uniform price for services wherever they use the service in the UK. [65196]

Mr. Ian McCartney: As my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry made clear in his Statement to this House on 7 December 1998 on the future of the Post Office, the Government remain committed to the Post Office being subject to a universal service obligation. A uniform public tariff across the UK, regardless of delivery distance, will be maintained for those activities that fall within this obligation.

Nuclear Reprocessing Contracts

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will specify the procedures for recovery of losses incurred by BNFL on nuclear reprocessing contracts in the UK in the process of cancellation by German interests (a) under contract and (b) under inter-governmental agreements; if he will specify the amount of such losses; and if he will make a statement. [66836]

Mr. Byers: My hon. Friend the Minister for Energy and Industry and I met the German Environment Minister, Juergen Trittin, on 20 January to discuss BNFL's reprocessing contracts with Germany.

We made clear to Mr. Trittin that the decision to phase out nuclear power was a matter for Germany herself to decide.

But we also stressed that the costs of that decision should not be borne by BNFL which had entered into legally binding contracts in good faith. It would be wrong for the company to suffer financially from a change in German policy over which they had no control. We also emphasised the point that the contracts would be determined under English law. BNFL are firmly of the view that the German utilities are under a clear contractual obligation.

We also made it clear that, if the 650 tonnes of German spent fuel in store at Sellafield were not to be reprocessed, then it would have to be returned to Germany. The UK will not act as a permanent storage depot for nuclear material. We were pleased to announce that Mr. Trittin agreed that a joint working group of UK and German officials be established to work out the practical details of returning the German material should this prove to be necessary.

Researchers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the letter of 7 October 1998 from the Minister for Science to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, what response he has had from OST to his request about taking forward specific projects recommended by Sir Gareth Roberts's report on researchers. [65408]

Mr. Battle: The Office of Science and Technology has been principally involved in work to restructure the membership of the Research Careers Initiative, as recommended in the report. It has also had informal discussions with a number of organisations, in particular to take forward the report's recommendations relating to provision of career guidance and training for researchers. I understand that a new RCI steering group will be meeting in the next few weeks to consider more specific actions.

Refrigerants

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the letter of 11 November (td-235–11) from the Minister for Energy and Industry to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, what progress he has made in considering air products refrigeration systems using air as the coolant as an alternative to CFCs and other ozone-depleting refrigerants. [65407]

Mr. Battle: My officials have contacted Air Products Europe Inc. to obtain further information about the Closed Cycle Air Refrigeration (CCAR) system. Their response suggests that the current technology is not yet an economic proposition for domestic refrigeration, but has potential for specialised industrial and buildings applications such as large food storage facilities. The promotion of air cycle refrigeration is being addressed by 2 special interest groups set up with MAFF assistance at the Food Refrigeration and Process Engineering Research Centre at Bristol University, which has received UK and EU funding. Air Products have been in contact with the Centre and have given a presentation on the CCAR system.

Domestic Gas Appliances

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to review the regulations covering safety standards for domestic gas appliances. [65331]

Mr. Battle: The safety of new domestic gas appliances is controlled by the Gas Appliances (Safety) Regulations 1995, ("the Regulations") which implement into UK law the European Council's Gas Appliances Directive.

The Regulations contain "essential requirements" which manufacturers of gas appliances are required to meet. To ensure that gas appliances comply with these safety provisions, manufacturers are required to submit their product to a third-party Notified Body for type approval before it may be placed on the market. Manufacturers must also appoint a Notified Body to undertake periodic surveillance of the production process in order to ensure that the product continues to conform to the type that was originally approved.

Millennium Trade Round

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list Her Majesty's Government's objectives in the proposed Millennium Round of trade negotiations. [65979]

Mr. Wilson: The UK Government are strongly in favour of a broad-based new Round of trade negotiations in the World Trade Organisation, and has backed the European Commission's calls for a comprehensive approach. Decisions are to be taken on the scope and timing of these negotiations at the third WTO Ministerial Conference, which will be held in the United States in November this year.

Our objectives at this stage include further tariff reductions; reducing the burden on business and barriers to trade represented by industrial standards and technical regulations; opening up Government procurement markets in third countries; simplifying import and export procedures; ensuring proper enforcement of intellectual property rights around the world; seeking substantial progressive reduction in support and protection for agriculture and developing better regimes to cover issues such as food safety; deepening and broadening the liberalisation of trade in services; establishing a liberal, rules-based framework for international investment; clarifying the interaction between environmental and trade policies to meet concerns that liberalisation should be pursued in a manner compatible with sustainable development; and clarifying the interaction between trade and competition issues. Throughout the Round we shall want to ensure that the interests of developing countries are taken into account and that every opportunity is taken to promote further engagement of the least developed countries.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to ensure full consultation with Parliament, relevant non-Governmental organisations and the public over developments in the proposed Millennium Round of trade negotiations. [65982]

Mr. Wilson: The Government have always consulted fully on major trade policy developments. The proposed Millennium Round of trade negotiations will not get underway until after the third WTO Ministerial Conference in November 1999. In preparation for and during these negotiations, the Government will consult with interested parties as we have in the past. The timetable for these consultations has not yet been finalised.

WALES

National Assembly

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish the consultation paper on the disqualification of persons from membership of the National Assembly for Wales under section 12 of the Government of Wales Act 1998. [66163]

Mr. Michael: The consultation referred to ran from 13 August to 2 October 1998. Views were invited on proposed offices and employment whose holders would be disqualified from also being members of the National Assembly by means of an Order-in-Council under section 12 of the 1998 Act.

I expect to put a draft of the Order before Parliament. It will be subject to affirmative resolution procedure in both Houses.

Wales European Centre

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place a copy in the Library of the letter from the Head of European Division concerning the recent appointment of the Chief Executive of the Wales European Centre. [66878]

Mr. Michael: No. The head of the European Division is not a member of the Board of the Wales European Centre but attends as an observer. He was unable to attend the meeting of the Board at which the appointment of a new director was under consideration. He therefore sent a letter on a personal and confidential basis to the Secretary of the Board of the Wales European Centre. It was made quite clear that it did not present a view on behalf of my Department. The letter did not express a view on the proposed appointment but (a) conveyed points that had been raised with us by certain members of the wider partnership and (b) set out a number of questions which he suggested should be considered by the Board in deciding whether they should accept the recommendations of the appointments panel. I understand that each of these questions were fully considered by the Board in reaching a conclusion.

I am sure that my hon. Friend would be the first to criticise any official who failed to pass on pertinent views in this way or who failed to suggest questions to which such a Board should seek answers. That he did so strengthens the appointment procedure and public confidence that the Board sought to appoint the best person for the job, in the best interests of Wales.

The Wales European Centre is an independent body, headed by a Board which includes representatives of the partners who fund and support its work.

Neither I nor my officials will interfere with its work but I strongly support the Centre as a partner in promoting the people of Wales in Europe and for that reason I visited the Centre two weeks ago to discuss how best to cooperate and complement each other's work. I hope my hon. Friend and all Welsh members will join in this endeavour.

HEALTH

Psychotic Conditions

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking to ensure that assessments of a patient's mental health, with particular reference to possible psychotic conditions, have excluded known genetic diseases which share the same symptoms. [R] [66148]

Mr. Hutton: The assessment of those presenting with mental health problems includes inquiries into family history of psychiatric and medical disorders.

Deafness (Early Diagnosis)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the benefits of early diagnosis of deafness to language acquisition. [66192]

Mr. Hutton: We are aware that early identification and intervention is vital for normal language development, and age at identification and consequent age at which a hearing aid is fitted have become important indicators of screening and service performance.

Most health authorities screen children who are at risk of permanent hearing impairment soon after birth. We are currently considering ways in which the screening system for children with hearing impairment can be improved and extended so that more children can be identified and treated earlier in life.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to promote the early diagnosis of deafness among children. [66191]

Mr. Hutton: A 1997 review commissioned by the health technology assessment programme suggested considering a system of universal neo-natal screening followed at seven months by a targeted screening using an infant distraction test. The National Screening Committee, through its sub-committee on child health screening, is now considering these suggestions for implementation across the National Health Service. Any proposed changes to screening arrangements need to be considered very carefully to see whether they would be feasible and clinically cost effective. We do not expect the Committee to make a rushed decision on this important issue.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will implement a deafness screening programme for all children at birth. [66328]

Mr. Hutton: The National Screening Committee advises United Kingdom Health Ministers on all aspects of the introduction, modification or withdrawal of screening programmes. The Committee is currently considering the case for replacing the present infant distraction test with universal neonatal screening. We expect to receive advice later this year.

House Dust Mites

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the letter of 9 October 1998 (POH(6)5437/63) from the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, what assessment his Department has made of fabrics containing fungicide which kills house dust mites in new bedding materials. [65402]

Mr. Hutton: We have no plans to make such an assessment.

Organ Preservation

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the letter of 1 December 1998 (POH(6)5437/66) to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, what assessment he has made of Japanese research on organ preservation. [65409]

Mr. Hutton: The Japanese research is at too early a stage for making any meaningful assessments of its applicability to human transplantation. We are maintaining a close watching brief on its progress.

Mid Essex Hospital Services NHS Trust

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his replies of 8 December 1998, Official Report, column 185, if he will (a) list the latest figures for people waiting 12 months or more for hospital treatment in the Mid Essex Hospital Trust area and (b) the latest figures for people waiting (i) 13 to 25 weeks and (ii) 26 weeks or more to see a consultant in the Mid Essex Hospital Trust area. [66130]

Mr. Denham: 1,194 people were waiting 12 months or more for hospital treatment at the Mid Essex Hospital National Health Service Trust at the end of November 1998. The number of people waiting 13 to 25 weeks to see a consultant was 1,596 at the end of September 1998; the number of people waiting over 26 weeks was 341 at the end of September 1998.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve the inspection procedure for accommodation for asylum seekers (a) before the introduction of and (b) under the asylum seekers support scheme. [66714]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Home Office currently has no responsibility for the accommodation of asylum seekers (other than those held in detention). Asylum seekers who are currently in need of accommodation support receive such support from local authorities.

The new asylum seekers support scheme described in the White Paper, "Fairer, Faster and Firmer—a modern approach to immigration and asylum" (Cm 4018) is in the planning stage. It is too soon to indicate what plans we have for inspection of asylum seeker accommodation.

Adult Education (Section 11 Funding)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proportion of section 11 funding in each of the participating local education authorities is currently used to support adult education; [66611]

(2) if he will list each local education authority currently using section 11 funding to support adult education; [66613]

(3) what proportion of section 11 funding is currently used to support adult education; [66612]

(4) what is the total amount of section 11 grant for the financial year 1998–99. [66614]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Section 11 grant funds projects in education and in other service areas including social services and housing. Total provision in the current financial year is £82.68 million. Projects with 118 local education authorities, as well as grant-maintained schools and colleges in the further education sector, cover a range of educational activity. Some local education authority projects principally concerned with other activities (eg English language support for school pupils whose first language is not English) include elements of adult education (eg family literacy work delivered through schools). Precise disaggregation of costs in such cases is difficult. The table lists local education authorities which have specific adult education projects; and shows, in relation to the 1998–99 financial year, the potential grant cost of these projects as a percentage of the total potential grant cost of the local education authority's section 11 projects. The potential grant cost of specific adult education projects in relation to the 1998–99 financial year represents 1.03 per cent. of the total potential grant cost of local education authorities' projects, and 0.95 per cent. of the total potential grant cost across the section 11 programme as a whole.

Bolton	13.21

Bristol	1.79
Bromley	43.75

[1] Most section 11-funded provision in Peterborough is covered by a project managed by Cambridgeshire, which pre-dated local government reorganisation. The table reflects the estimated potential grant cost of posts in Peterborough under that project.

Note:

In addition, some funding for adult education is currently paid under projects with further education colleges. In Birmingham, such funding would amount to 4.49 per cent. of the local education authority's funding if paid direct.

Common Market Referendum

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library the material held by the Security Services relating to the 1975 referendum on United Kingdom membership of the Common Market. [66396]

Mr. Straw: It is for the Director General to decide which Security Service files should be released for public scrutiny, and to determine when they should be released. In reaching these decisions, he is bound by the relevant provisions of the Public Records Acts of 1958 and 1967, including the 30-year rule. In common with records belonging to other public bodies, Security Service records are released to the Public Record Office.

Life Sentences

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are currently serving life sentences (a) in total and (b) by category of offence for which sentenced. [66334]

Mr. George Howarth: The latest available information is for 30 November 1998. On that date, there were 4,011 life sentence prisoners (3,872 males and 139 females) in prisons in England and Wales. A breakdown by offence is given in the table.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current staffing level at Feltham Young Offenders Unit; and if it is at full strength to cover all regimes. [66444]

Mr. George Howarth: The prison officer staffing complement at Feltham Young Offender Institution is 243. There were 242 prison officers in post as at 15 January 1999. Of these, 230 are operational, nine are undergoing prison officer initial training and three are suspended. There are six members of staff on long-term sick leave.

The health care department at Feltham is currently running seven health care officers/nurses short of complement; the gymnasium is two officers short of complement; and the industries and works departments are three instructors short of complement. In each case the regime has been affected. Steps are being taken to improve this situation; two officers are receiving training to become physical education officers and one additional instructor has been identified for works and industries.

The governor is conducting a recruitment exercise for officers and is implementing measures to reduce the number of staff on long-term sick leave.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reduce the length of time (a) young offenders and (b) juveniles spend on remand at Feltham Young Offenders Unit. [66391]

Mr. George Howarth: One of the Government's top priorities is faster and more efficient youth justice proceedings. One of our key manifesto commitments is to halve the time it takes to deal with persistent young offenders from arrest to sentence. In 1996, the average time taken was 142 days—the objective is to reduce this to 71 days. In the Public Service Agreements for the Home Office and the Criminal Justice System, the Government are committed to achieving a national average of 71 days by March 2002.

A range of measures have been introduced aimed at reducing delay in the youth justice system. The Home Office has prepared comprehensive best practice guidance on a range of issues—particularly the establishment of fast-tracking schemes in local areas. The Crime and Disorder Act 1998 includes a whole range of measures to tackle delays—strengthening the ability of the courts to manage cases, and making procedural changes to ensure that unnecessary delays are avoided—we have just implemented some of these measures; others are being piloted.

More specifically, the Government's plans for ensuring that appropriate arrangements are in place for remanded juveniles are being taken forward in the context of the wider programme of work arising from its review of all forms of secure accommodation for young offenders and young people held on remand or under sentence. The Government's aim is to implement provisions in the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 as soon as practicable, and by June 1999 at the latest, to allow the courts to remand directly to local authority secure accommodation 12–14 year olds, 15 and 16 year old girls and, where a place has been identified in advance, vulnerable 15 and 16 year old boys. The existing arrangements for remanding other 15 and 16 year old boys to Prison Service accommodation will continue for the time being, though the Government wish to move to a position where the practice of prison remands is no longer necessary.

In the meantime, work is being taken forward, with the Youth Justice Board, to improve the standard of care and quality of regimes for remanded and sentenced juveniles held in Prison Service accommodation to ensure that these are appropriate to the needs of young people. The Government are also making available funds, which will be administered by the Youth Justice Board, to develop local bail support provision to help ensure that custodial remands are used appropriately for the most serious and persistent cases.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the percentage of uniformed officers from ethnic minority communities at Feltham Young Offenders Unit. [66401]

Mr. George Howarth: There are currently 15 uniformed officers, 6 per cent. of the total, from ethnic minority communities employed at Feltham Young Offender Institution.

A local recruitment exercise is under-way and advertisements have been worded specifically to encourage applications from individuals from ethnic minority communities. Selection is always on merit.

The Prison Service has recently been reviewing levels of representation from the ethnic minorities and the opportunities it provides for its own ethnic minority staff. As at 1 January 1999, the Prison Service employed 1,246 members of staff, 3 per cent. of the total from the ethnic minorities. Proposals for action are being developed which will include the launch of a new national recruitment outreach strategy.

Prison Accommodation (Elderly Inmates)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what provisions he has made for the conversion of prison accommodation to suit an elderly prison population; [66441]

(2) what plans he has to authorise conversion of prisons or prison wings to cater for the needs of elderly inmates. [66434]

Mr. George Howarth: The Prison Service meets the demands of elderly prisoners in the light of their particular circumstances and the facilities already available at the particular establishment where they are housed. At present, inmates over the age of 50 are held within the general prison population according to their legal status, security requirement and geographical location. This enables inmates to receive regular visits from professional advisers and maintain ties with their families. It also helps the Probation Service in their work to resettle offenders back into the community.

Kingston prison, Portsmouth, has a unit for elderly life sentenced prisoners, which was created in recognition of the increasing number of these prisoners. The Prison Service is keeping the position under consideration.

Prison Service (Recruitment)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the Job Simulation Assessment Centre system of recruitment for the Prison Service. [66435]

Mr. George Howarth: In its recent annual report, the Board of Visitors of Feltham Young Offenders Institution asked the Home Secretary to look closely at the arrangements for the recruitment of prison officers, which they feel exacerbate local staffing problems.

Job simulation assessment centres form part of the new approach to the recruitment of prison officers. They have been developed to provide fairer, more objective and more reliable assessments of candidates than the recruitment process which they replaced.

The Prison Service is aware, however, of the difficulties being experienced at Feltham and elsewhere in recruiting suitable prison officers and other grades of staff. It is therefore carrying out a short review in order to identify ways in which the situation can be improved.

Commercial Lobbyists

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what rules or guidance his Department has to govern the (a) formal and (b) informal interaction between his civil servants and commercial lobbyists. [66211]

Mr. Straw: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 27 July 1998, Official Report, column 4.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate (Correspondence)

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what target he has set the Immigration and Nationality Directorate for replying to correspondence. [66233]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) has a target of 15 working days for replying to letters from hon. Members. This includes correspondence addressed to Ministers and addressed to the Secretary of the IND Board, to which IND officials reply. In addition, the Whitehall Service Standards operated across Government under the auspices of the Service First Initiative means IND has a target of 20 working days for replying to correspondence from members of the public which does not specifically relate to individual applications.

The hon. Member will be aware of recent notice given to Members of Parliament that moving offices and changing procedures in IND will cause delays in responding to correspondence for a few months. This is a temporary disruption, which should enable more efficient delivery against targets in the future.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Local Government Finance

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (a) the dates and (b) the Minister in attendance, indicating whether (i) in person or (ii) by video link, for meetings requested by local authorities to discuss the local government grant settlement; and if he will list in each case the date his Department received the request for such a meeting from the local authority. Rainham Marsh, Havering

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if English Partnerships has made any determination in respect of the suitability of land at Rainham Marsh in Havering for (a) development and (b) regeneration; and if he will place copies in the Library; [65900]

(2) if English Partnerships supports the amended planning application made by Havering Borough Council for development on a site of special scientific interest at Rainham Marsh in Havering; and if he will make a statement. [65903]

Mr. Meale: No determination has been made by English Partnerships as to their possible involvement in the generation or development of the Havering Riverside site (known as Rainham Marsh). The Havering Riverside site is entirely in the ownership of the London Borough of Havering and, being included within the Unitary Development Plan prepared in 1993 has been considered to be of strategic importance to employment generation within the Thames Gateway area. Any development must meet the requirements for nature conservation also set out in the UDP. English Partnerships is one of the partner organisations examining options for its possible development. English Partnerships supports the strategic commercial development of this site as far as it is in line with recommendations in the approved Unitary Development Plan.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reasons English Partnerships has made an application for planning permission on a site of special scientific interest at Rainham Marsh in Havering in identical terms to an application previously made by Havering Borough Council; and subsequently withdrew it. [65902]

Mr. Meale: Following LB Havering's initial outline planning application for development in January 1997, English Partnerships submitted a further identical application in November 1997 in an attempt to deal with the issue of securing benefits for the developing through a Section 106 Agreement. Clearly the Borough cannot submit such an application to itself; to assist the local authority, English Partnership, although in no way committed to this project, therefore became the applicant. That application has now been withdrawn in response to improvements embodied in the London Borough of Havering's amended scheme. The Council is in consultation with both English Nature, English Heritage and other environmental groups, on the environmental implications of the application proposals. All parties are now collaborating to prepare a full environment impact assessment in an attempt to reconcile the competing interests on the site.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what powers English Partnerships possesses to (a) make and (b) support planning applications on land in respect of which he has not given directions or consent as to its suitability for (a) regeneration and (b) development; [65904]

(2) what (a) directions and (b) consents have been given to English Partnerships relating to the possible (i) regeneration and (ii) development of Rainham Marsh; and if he will place copies in the Library. [65899]

Mr. Meale: The powers of English Partnerships, contained in the Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Act 1993 are directed at its main statutory objective of securing the regeneration of land, across England, which is contaminated, derelict, vacant, unused or likely to become so. In pursuit of this objective the Agency can acquire, hold, manage, reclaim, improve and dispose of land, plant machinery, equipment and other property; give financial assistance to other persons (including for use on environmental improvements); and generally do anything necessary or expedient for the purposes of its objects or for purposes incidental to those purposes. Section 167 of the Act provides for the Secretary of State to issue guidance or directions. Guidance was issued to English Partnerships in April 1994 on which land is suitable for regeneration or development or how it is to exercise its functions. No guidance or directions have been issued since that time, and no guidance, directions or consents have been issued with respect to Rainham Marshes. English Partnerships is free to make planning applications on the same basis as any other applicant.

Countryside (Public Access)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 16 December 1998, Official Report, columns 539–40, if he will make a statement on the way in which the Government will take into account future financial settlements with regards to the increased costs to local authorities of increased public access to the countryside. [66057]

Ms Armstrong: We shall be consulting further with the Local Government Association on the financial implications for local authorities of our proposals for increasing public access to the countryside. The need for revenue expenditure by local authorities will be taken into account, along with other spending pressures and the scope for efficiencies, in a future local government finance settlement.

Jubilee Line Extension

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his Department's current estimate for the (a) completion and (b) commissioning of the Jubilee Line Extension. [66639]

Dr. Reid: London Transport plan to open the Jubilee Line Extension in three phases (firstly Stratford to North Greenwich, then on to Waterloo and finally to Green Park and connection with the existing Jubilee Line). Commissioning will thus overlap with the final completion of the construction and fitting out work. Commissioning work is already in hand. London Transport aims to have all three phases commissioned and in operation by the autumn.

Barrage Schemes

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many of the country's estuaries (a) have been and (b) are currently being investigated for barrage schemes. [66371]

Mr. Raynsford: This information is not kept centrally.

A large number of estuaries have been investigated to varying levels of detail in connection with flood protection, tidal power generation and for amenity purposes. However, many of these have not been and are unlikely to be taken forward. Some examples are indicated in the following table but this is by no means comprehensive.

Contaminated Metals

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what information he has received since May 1997 from (a) the Environment Agency and (b) Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, concerning interception of illegally imported radioactively contaminated metals; and what arrangements are in place to stop the recycling of imported contaminated metals. [66430]

Mr. Meale: Reports of such incidents are received from the Radioactive Substances Sub-Group of the UK Interpol Environment Crime Group. Since April 1997 we have received information about 5 incidents involving the interception of illegally imported radioactive contaminated metals.

Imports of radioactively contaminated materials into the UK are regulated by the Environment Agency (EA) in England and Wales and the Scottish Environment Protection Agency (SEPA) in Scotland, under the Transfrontier Shipment of Radioactive Waste Regulations 1993 and Council Regulation 1493/93 on shipments of radioactive substances between Member States. The reuse or recycling of such materials is regulated by EA and SEPA under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993.

Wind Farms

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will take steps to ensure that the benefits of wind power in terms of pollution are given greater weight by planning inspectors when considering planning applications for wind-farms. [66329]

Mr. Raynsford: Inspectors must give appropriate weight to all material planning considerations when considering wind-farm proposals on a case by case basis.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many wind-farm projects have been refused planning permission in each of the last five years; [66226]

(2) how many wind energy projects have been built in the last three years. [66227]

Mr. Raynsford: This information is not held by the Department and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Most planning applications are dealt with by local planning authorities.

Water and Sewerage Companies

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will meet the Chartered Institute of Environmental Health to discuss its proposal that the Water Industry Act 1991 be amended to place a duty on water companies and OFWAT to operate in such a way as to protect public health and the environment. [66556]

Mr. Meale: The Government are deeply committed to protecting both the environment and public health. However, the Water Industry Act 1991 already places the Director General under a duty to consider the environment when formulating or considering any proposal relating to water companies' functions. In the context of the current review of utility regulation, we intend to strengthen this so that the Director General will be under a statutory duty to have regard to statutory guidance on social and environmental objectives in the exercise of his statutory functions.

The 1991 Act also places a number of duties on the water and sewerage undertakers, and the protection of public health is at the core of these duties. The Water Industry Bill will further protect public health by removing water companies' ability to disconnect people's homes in the event of non-bill payment. There are therefore already clear duties on both the Director General and the water companies to take account of public health and the environment. Apart from strengthening the duties on the Director General through the utility regulation review, I do not see a need for further duties.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what method is used by OFWAT to determine the adequacy of investment in the sewerage network by the water and sewerage companies; and if he will make a statement. [66558]

Mr. Meale: Ofwat's approach to assessing the adequacy of capital maintenance expenditure on the sewerage network is to consider trends in the serviceability of assets to customers and to the environment and, if appropriate, allow for the expenditure levels to be adjusted at the next price review.

In "Raising the Quality" (September 1998) we published guidance to the Director General of Water Services which suggested that sewerage companies should take a strategic approach to the maintenance of their sewerage assets by, for example, developing an assessment system similar to the one already used for water supply.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those water and sewerage companies which have met their targets on flooding from sewers and collapses (a) between 1990 and 1995 and (b) since 1995. [66359]

Mr. Meale: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 19 January 1999, Official Report, columns 441–42, in response to a Question from the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Brake).

Marine Pollution

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 12 January 1998, Official Report, column 187, if his reference to historic levels relates to pre-1998 levels; and if it is his intention to reduce concentrations under paragraph 15 of the Sintra statement to pre-1998 levels by 2020. [66560]

Mr. Meale: The UK is working with the other OSPAR Contracting Parties to establish a common understanding of "historic levels" and how these levels will relate to Member States' obligations under the Radioactive Substances Strategy agreed at Sintra. The UK will fully meet its international obligations agreed at Sintra and elsewhere.

Docklands Light Railway

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will provide a report on the progress of Docklands Light Railway Limited. [67025]

Mr. Caborn: I have today placed in the Library of the House the Docklands Light Railway Limited's (DLR Ltd) Annual Report and Accounts for 1997–98.

The railway continues to make excellent progress. Passenger numbers increased from 17 million to 23 million during the year and continue to grow. Excellent progress is being made on the extension of the railway to Lewisham and it is expected to be operational in time for the Millennium. DLR Ltd., now directly owned by the Secretary of State for Environment, Transport and the Regions, assumed its new role as a holding company, with effect from 6 April 1997 and successfully franchised the railway's operation and maintenance to the private sector.

Atmospheric Tests (Crosby)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will give details of (a) the atmospheric-tests which have been carried out by his Department in Crosby, (b) the test results and (c) the action which is being considered as a result; and if he will make a statement. [66709]

Mr. Meale: There are four Nitrogent Dioxide (NO_2) Diffusion Tube Network sites in or near Crosby.

Site name	Site address	Grid reference East	West

UK Smoke and SO_2 Network

Suspended particulate matter (as black smoke) and sulphur dioxide (as total acidity) are measured at one site in Crosby, CROSBY 3 situated at Merchant Taylor's School, Liverpool Road. The site is part of the UK Smoke and SO_2 Monitoring network and has been in operation since 1979. It is in a predominantly residential (suburban) area. Mean concentrations of SO_2 and smoke at this site for the year April 1997-March 1998 were $8Tgm^{-3}$ for smoke (British Standard calibration) and $18Tgm^{-3}$ for SO_2. These values are below the UK means for the same period, which were $9Tgm^{-3}$ and $21Tgm^{-3}$ for smoke and SO_2 respectively, based on the whole network. A summary of the statistics for this period is as presented.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the (a) costs to date and (b) projected costs to the public purse of work associated with the Birmingham Northern Relief Road, including (i) land purchase, (ii) legal costs and (iii) policing costs; and what contribution to these costs will be made by Midland Expressway Ltd. [66414]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 20 January 1999]: Under the Concession Agreement with Midland Expressway Limited (MEL) the costs and risks of constructing the Birmingham Northern Relief Road (BNRR) and its link roads fall to MEL, though certain non-works costs involved in promoting a private finance scheme fall to the Government.

The total cost to date of selecting the private sector promoter, negotiating the Concession Agreement and contributing to the statutory Order-making process is estimated at £9.8 million, of which £1 million is attributable to legal advice. Land acquisition and management costs are recoverable from the concessionaire. Policing costs are a matter for the Police Authority and the Home Office.

Projected costs to the public purse associated with the BNRR include a contribution towards the reconstruction of the existing M42 near Water Orton to enable its use by BNRR traffic. Under the concession agreement the major part of the cost of this work is to be met by MEL, but the Department is to contribute a share currently estimated at £20 million. This takes into account that much of the traffic on that section will not use the BNRR.

Further costs to the public purse could result from any changes imposed by the Department to the requirements of the concession agreement, for example, changes reflecting revised engineering standards. Any imposed changes which involve extra costs to the Concessionaire have to be paid for by the Secretary of State. The present estimate of the agreed changes is a maximum of £1.5 million.

In addition to these costs, about £11.4 million in the period until June 1991 was spent on the earlier proposals for a publicly financed Birmingham Northern Relief Road.

National Air Traffic Services

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will have the power to insist on minimum staffing levels for the reorganised National Air Traffic Services. [66863]

Dr. Reid: My right hon. Friend has no plans to take powers to set either minimum or maximum staffing levels for NATS. Except where safety regulations prescribe minimum staffing levels, it will—as now—be for NATS' management to determine the staffing levels the company needs to discharge its obligations.

Fair Rents

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to limit increases in registered fair rents; and if he will make a statement. [66937]

Mr. Raynsford: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 13 January 1999, Official Report, columns 216–17.

Housing

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the current tabulation of the distribution of the SAP rating of the housing stock. [66885]

Mr. Raynsford: Details of the distribution of SAP ratings in the housing stock will be included in an energy report of the 1996 English House Condition Survey due for publication this spring.

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to consult on a best value framework for housing as announced in his statement on Housing and Regeneration Policy on 22 July 1998. [67438]

Ms Armstrong: We are today publishing a consultation paper, "Best Value in Housing Framework", allowing until 16 April 1999 for comments. Best value is a central part of the Government's agenda for modernising local government. Its application to housing, as one of the key functions undertaken by local authorities, is therefore of prime importance. Under the provisions in Part I of the Local Government Bill, currently before Parliament, local authorities will have to set, in consultation with tenants and others, tough targets for their investment programmes and for the quality of their service delivery. They will be judged by their performance. As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced on 11 June 1998 a new Housing Inspectorate, under the auspices of the Audit Commission, will be established which will monitor their performance.

The consultation paper explains the framework within which local housing authorities will need to operate in obtaining best value in housing. It takes account of key housing issues such as the relationship between best value and the housing investment programme process; the role of tenants and residents; the read across to registered social landlords; and principles around the operation and establishment of the Housing Inspectorate. I have placed copies of the consultation paper in the Libraries of both Houses.

Private Rental Deposits

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 18 January 1999, Official Report, column 306, concerning rental deposits, if a date has been set for the meeting with Ministers; and how its conclusions will be reported to hon. Members. [66883]

Mr. Raynsford: My officials have had constructive initial meetings with the organisations representing landlords, agents and tenants. In the light of these discussions, some of the organisations have asked to consult their members further. A date for the meeting with Ministers will be fixed very shortly, when these further discussions have taken place. I cannot say at this stage how or when I will report conclusions back to hon. Members.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to letters of 15 December 1997 (EE/P50/17203/97) and of 9 June (EE/P50/9738/98) to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, what action has been taken as a result of the Environment Agency's report on its research using earthworms as indicator organisms of contaminated land. [65403]

Mr. Meale: Results from the study highlighted the need for further chemical analysis of the soils and earthworms to enable the biological and chemical data to be fully understood. The analytical work was completed in mid-December and is currently being evaluated and interpreted. A final report is expected in March 1999.

Transport Planners

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the letter of 17 July 1998 (R/J/P50/8480/98/98) to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, what progress has been made in developing a gender audit to assist transport planners. [65405]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Transport Studies Unit at the University of East London has been commissioned to produce the gender audit to assist transport planners and operators. The audit is due to be finalised in the summer of this year. As part of the development of the audit, there will be a number of focus groups with professionals, users and transport providers, and the Unit is creating a website to aid the exchange of ideas and information on what women's public transport needs are and how they can be met. A Steering Group will shortly be convening to discuss progress of the audit.

Air Transport Users Council

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what funding is provided to the Air Transport Users Council from public bodies; and if he will list those bodies. [66827]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Air Transport Users Council is entirely funded by the Civil Aviation Authority which operates on a commercial basis receiving its income from airlines' fees and services provided to other bodies including the Government. The Council does not receive any public funds.

Air Travel

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which Department has responsibility for monitoring the Warsaw Convention as it relates to air travel. [66826]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Responsibility for the monitoring of the Warsaw Convention rests with the International Civil Aviation Organisation. My Department has responsibility for policy matters relating to the Convention and the implementation of it in United Kingdom legislation. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is responsible for the signature and ratification of new instruments and, when new instruments enter into force, is the recipient of formal communications from the Government of Poland.

Traffic Congestion

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the cost to British industry of traffic congestion. [65218]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Last year's White Paper on the Future of Transport explained, as background to the new policy framework set out in that White Paper, that traffic congestion is costing the economy billions of pounds every year, and that traffic forecasts based on pre-White Paper policies pointed to more congestion and increasing costs. As mentioned in para. 1.7 of the White Paper, published estimates of the costs include the CBI's of £15 billion per annum, and National Economic Research Associates' of £7 billion per annum.

Biotechnology

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has (a) conducted and (b) commissioned into the possibility of biotechnology causing irreversible contamination of the ecosystem. [66679]

Mr. Meacher: The Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has an ongoing research programme to assess the risk and potential impact of genetically modified (GM) organisms on the environment:

(a) Research conducted and reports published by the DETR

i. GM Crops and their Wild Relatives—a UK Perspective

ii. Genetic Modification of Fish—a UK Perspective

iii. Dispersal of GM Microorganisms by Abiotic Factors and Soil Invertebrates

iv. Risk Assessment and the Release of GM Microorganisms into the Pylloplane

v. Risk Assessment and the Release of GM Microorganisms into the Rhizosphere

vi. Risk Assessment and the Release of GM Microorganisms into the Environment

vii. Gene Flow in Natural Populations of Brassica and Beta

viii. Selectable Marker Genes in GM Organisms

Research conducted and awaiting publication by the DETR

i. Environmental Impact of GM Crops

ii. Safety of Plant Viral Inserts

iii. Investigation of Feral Oilseed Rape Populations

iv. Review of GM Bioinsecticides

v. Review of Parasitic Nematodes for Biological Control of Invertebrates

(b) Research commissioned by the DETR and ongoing

i. Environmental Impact of Insect Resistance in GM Plants

ii. Impact of Multiple Tolerance in GM Plants

iii. Environmental Impact of Disease Resistance in GM Plants

iv. Assessment of the Biocontainment of GM Microorganisms in a Model Ecosystem

v. Monitoring Large Scale Releases of GM Plants.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the potential for biotechnology to produce herbicide resistant weeds. [66683]

Mr. Meacher: All applications for the release of plants genetically modified for herbicide tolerance are accompanied by a risk assessment that considers the potential for the herbicide tolerant crop to become a persistent weed or for it to cross-pollinate wild relatives and produce herbicide tolerant hybrids. The Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE) considers these applications on a case by case basis and advises the Government on the likelihood that herbicide tolerant weeks will result from the release of the genetically modified plant.

My Department also funds research into the potential of biotechnology to create herbicide tolerant weeds. Completed and current projects are as listed:

(i) GM Crops and their Wild Relatives—a UK Perspective

(ii) Gene Flow in Natural Populations of Brassica and Beta

(iii) Environmental Impact of GM Crops

(iv) Investigation of Feral Oilseed Rape Populations

(v) Impact of Multiple Tolerance in GM Plants

(vi) Monitoring Large Scale Releases of GM Plants.

Car Travel

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimates he has received of the average number of miles driven by a non-company car driver in each of the last five years (a) in the course of work, (b) for travel from home to work and (c) for other reasons. [66912]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The average number of miles driven in a non-company car in each of the last five years is:

Average annual vehicle mileage of non-company cars by year and by journey purpose: 1993–97

Miles

Year	In the course of work	Travel from home to work	Other mileage	Total mileage
1993	924	2,468	5,065	8,475
1994	903	2,459	5,260	8,623
1995	874	2,428	5,094	8,396
1996	861	2,446	5,071	8,378
1997	760	2,468	4,989	8,217
1995–97	832	2,447	5,052	8,331

National Travel Survey

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the average number of miles driven by a company car driver each year (a) in the course of work and (b) not in the course of work. [66910]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The average number of miles driven in a company car each year during the period 1995–97 (a) in the course of work is 11,380 miles, and (b) not in the course of work is 11,230 miles.

Source:
National Travel Survey.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has (a) to reduce the number of discretionary journeys made in company cars not in the course of work and (b) to reform the system of allowances for business-related journeys. [66911]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The White Paper, "A New Deal for Transport", contains a wide range of proposals to encourage more sustainable car use, many of which should help to reduce private mileage in company cars. More specifically, the Government are committed to increasing the taxation on free fuel provided by companies for private motoring annually by 20 per cent. above usual pump price increases over the next five years, to discourage its provision. The Inland Revenue is also continuing to review how the company car taxation regime, covering both business and private mileage, might be structured to send better environmental signals.

Gosport Marina

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what factors underlie the timescale for issuing a section 34 consent under the Coastal Protection Act 1949 to The Gosport Marina Limited in respect of its proposed redevelopment and construction of a 400 m section of the Millennium Promenade at Gosport. [66882]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Before granting his consent under the Coastal Protection Act 1949 my right hon. Friend has to consider any objections to the proposed works made on the ground of whether obstruction or danger to navigation is likely to result. In addition, Regulation 48 of the Conservation (Natural Habitats, etc.) Regulations 1994 requires him to determine whether the plan or project is likely to have a significant effect on a European site for nature conservation. In respect of the proposals submitted by The Gosport Marina Limited we are currently considering the submissions made by objectors and advice in respect of the likely impact on the Portsmouth Harbour Special Protection Area.

Local Government and Public Policy

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement about the research his Department has commissioned on cross-cutting issues relating to local government and public policy. [67439]

Ms Armstrong: Today, I am publishing two reports looking at how effective joint working, at both central and local levels, is at tackling a number of serious issues facing society today. These issues, like social exclusion, community safety, disaffected youth and sustainable development, cut across Government Departments.

We need to know how we can improve the design and delivery of policies aimed at tackling these issues and we need to shift the emphasis from attempting to solve problems to preventing them. The two reports contain lessons from the experience of joint working and advice about future co-operation in working towards agreed outcomes.

The research encourages everybody to look beyond short term, single issue approaches using a number of separate agencies to a more coherent, unified approach setting these issues in the widest possible context.

This joined-up approach is not only more desirable, but has already proved to be more effective in emerging policies like Health Action Zones and the Best Value pilots in my own specific area of responsibility, local government.

Darwin Advisory Committee

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the forthcoming financial management and policy review of the Darwin Advisory Committee. [67552]

Mr. Meacher: As part of the Government's programme of regular five-yearly financial, management and policy reviews of non-departmental public bodies my Department will conduct a thorough review of the Darwin Advisory Committee. The first stage of the review will take the form of a "prior options" study. This will assess the extent to which the Darwin Advisory Committee functions are necessary for the achievement of the Government's policies, and whether there is scope for contracting out or transferring all or part of its functions to another body.

The progress made by the Darwin Advisory Committee since it was set up will be examined and the results of that examination and of the prior options study will inform a detailed review of the Darwin Advisory Committee's policy and financial management systems.

I expect the reviews to last about 6–8 weeks. In carrying out the study my Department will consult widely with those who have an interest in the Committee's work.

Tenant Participation Compacts

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to publish the consultation paper on local authority tenant participation compacts. [67597]

Ms Armstrong: The Government's proposals for increasing tenant involvement in the management of local authority housing will be published in the consultation paper, "Tenant Participation Compacts" on 25 January 1999. The proposals link with the proposals contained in the consultation paper "Best Value in Housing Framework", which are being published today and on which I have made a separate announcement.

The consultation period will end on 31 March 1999 and a further announcement on the proposals will be made in May. I am arranging for copies of the consultation paper to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Special Advisers

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the special advisers in his Department and the issues on which they specialise; and to what level they have been security cleared. [62845]

Mr. Nick Brown: The two Special Advisers in my Department are: Mr. Kieran Simpson and Mr. Tom Greatrex. I am advised by the Department that they both have the level of security clearance appropriate to the matters with which they deal. The areas of MAFF responsibilities with which they respectively deal are set out below:

Mr. Simpson

- Agricultural Policy and the CAP
- Countryside and Rural Policy Issues
- Agricultural and Horticultural Commodities Production
- Forestry
- Pesticide Safety, Veterinary Medicines, Plant Health
- Research and Science
- Animal Welfare
- Departmental Administration and Establishment Issues

Mr. Greatrex

- Fisheries
- External Trade
- Food and Drinks Industry Competition Issues
- Export Promotion
- Food Safety and Standards; Meat Hygiene
- Animal Health (including BSE)
- Flood Defence.

Fishing Industry Initiatives

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which of the changes referred to in his New Year message to fishermen were initiatives from the industry itself. [66407]

Mr. Morley: Changes in a number of areas were prompted by concerns put forward from within the fishing industry. These included the introduction of fixed quota allocations, action to link the registration and licensing of fishing vessels to the declaration of maximum continuous or permanently derated engine power, restrictive licensing for scallop dredging and measures to assist the replacement or introduction of pelagic freezer trawlers. Additionally, changes were made to EU rules to increase the selectivity of fishing gear, to increase the minimum landing sizes of shellfish and to extend the quota system to additional species of fish in the North Sea.

BSE

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to test randomly the brains of slaughtered dairy cows for BSE. [66503]

Mr. Rooker: A study of brain tissue from cattle slaughtered in the Over Thirty Months Scheme was started on 4 January 1999. The aim is to collect, by the end of March, samples from 4,000 animals. The brain samples will be tested for the presence of abnormal prion protein (PrP^{Sc}) by two or more of the recently developed diagnostic tests, and also studied by histopathology for evidence of vacuolation. In compliance with a recommendation from SEAC, the study is being confined, in so far as is possible, to animals 5 years of age or over. 5 years is the average incubation period of BSE and PrP^{Sc} has been detected in brain tissue only quite late in the BSE incubation period.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what methods are available to confirm the diagnosis of transmissible spongiform encephalopathy using brain materials from slaughtered animals. [66499]

Mr. Rooker: At the moment, all diagnostic tests for BSE using brain tissue rely upon the infectious agent having reached the central nervous system. Current evidence indicates that this event occurs late in the incubation period, shortly before clinical onset. Any diagnostic test applied earlier in the incubation period is therefore likely to produce a negative result, even if the animal is infected. Once infectivity has reached the central nervous system, several diagnostic options are theoretically possible although none will be absolute. In other words, there may be some false negative results and interpretation of positive results is still open to question, given that some of the available tests have not been fully validated. The options available include mouse inoculation, which could take up to three years to give a result; histopathological examination of the brain stem; extraction of "scrapie-associated fibrils"; or one of a range of immunologically based tests for the detection of abnormal prion protein. None of the latter have been fully validated as yet.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the percentage of suspected BSE cases that have been subsequently confirmed in each year from 1988 to 1998. [66504]

Mr. Rooker: Of the cases placed under restriction in each calendar year and subsequently slaughtered, the following percentages were confirmed:

Percentage

Year of restriction	Confirmation rate for suspected BSE cases
1988	91.92
1989	88.54
1990	85.22
1991	86.24
1992	85.00
1993	83.66
1994	83.40
1995	83.36
1996	78.95
1997	81.30
1998	[1]77.16

[1] The 1998 figure is provisional; some results are still pending. It is unlikely that the full figures for 1998 will be available before the end of May 1999.

Note:
Data as at 8 January 1999

Consultation (Farmers)

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library full copies of the responses received to the Government's current consultation process with farmers, with the analysis carried out of the responses by his Department; and if he will make a statement. [66365]

Mr. Nick Brown: Farmers in England are being asked for their views on the implementation of proposals to reform the Common Agricultural Policy. Over 175,000 questionnaires have been sent out to farmers in England, asking them to indicate, by placing a tick in the appropriate box, whether they agree or disagree with options. Equivalent consultation exercises are being undertaken in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. Although it would not be meaningful to place copies of all individual returned questionnaires in the Library, summaries and analyses of the returned questionnaires will be deposited in the Library at intervals.

Pesticides

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what funding will be available for the Integrated Farming Initiative to limit the use of pesticides. [66590]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 19 January 1999]: The Department is committed to the encouragement of integrated farming and has spent over £1 million on research in this area in recent years, much of it through the LINK programme. The findings of this research were featured in a conference sponsored by MAFF in October 1998. Careful management of pesticide use is only one element of integrated farming and it would not be appropriate to single this out for dedicated funding.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations have taken place with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions concerning the implementation of a pesticide tax. [66591]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 19 January 1999]: Extensive study of the issues surrounding the introduction of a possible pesticide tax has been carried out by ECOTEC Research & Consulting on behalf of the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. An interdepartmental group of officials, including those from my own Department, oversaw the conduct of this research. Ministers have not so far discussed the consultant's conclusions.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Brussels on 18 to 19 January; and if he will make a statement. [67011]

Mr. Nick Brown: I represented the United Kingdom at a meeting of the EU Agriculture Council in Brussels on 18 and 19 January 1999.

The German Presidency informed the Agriculture Council of the work programme for the coming six months, of which the principal focus would be completion of the negotiation for reform of the Common Agricultural Policy (CAP) in the framework of Agenda 2000. In addition, the Presidency made it clear that the Council would discuss proposals on the annual CAP price fixing, animal welfare, consumer protection and organic livestock standards.

The Council resumed its discussions of the Agenda 2000 CAP reform proposals by conducting an in-depth debate on reform of the beef and milk sectors. On behalf of the UK, I supported the Commission's proposal to reduce prices and abolish intervention buying in the beef sector, though with appropriate arrangements to safeguard the systems of extensively-reared beef production which is characteristic of the UK. On reform of the milk sector, I pressed the case for a more thorough-going reform than that proposed by the Commission, referring specifically to the proposal made by the United Kingdom, Denmark, Italy and Sweden for reform in this sector which would lead to the eventual abolition of milk quotas.

The German Presidency outlined a programme of work on the CAP aspects of Agenda 2000, leading up to the meeting of the Agriculture Council beginning on 22 February. They indicated their intention to try to draw the negotiation to a conclusion at that Council in view of the timetable laid down by Heads of Government in Cardiff and in Vienna for completion of the whole package of measures by the end of March 1999. I welcomed their commitment to reaching early agreement on these proposals.

CABINET OFFICE

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what has been the total expenditure and the breakdown of expenditure in the Cabinet Office since May 1997 on (a) public opinion research, (b) television, radio and newspaper advertising, (c) direct mail and (d) publicity. [64186]

Mr. Kilfoyle [pursuant to his reply, 11 January 1999, c. 93]: I regret that a previous reply was incomplete in respect of amounts spent by the Cabinet Office since May 1997 on public opinion research. The amount showed £481,200 when it should have read £750,108 the expenditure on television, radio and newspaper advertising, £220,164; on direct mail, £794,319; and on publicity, £1,158,469 remain unchanged. All figures are net of recoverable VAT.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Jury Deliberations

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to permit licensed jury deliberation research. [66693]

Mr. Hoon: The Government have no plans to amend section 8 of the Contempt of Court Act 1981, which effectively bars research into how a jury has conducted its deliberations. It is possible to conduct research into certain other aspects of the jury system without contravening the Contempt of Court Act. Any proposals received by the Government for such research are considered individually.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 323

SESSION 1998–99

11th January—21th January 1999

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index to the daily parts and weekly Hansard is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Indexing Service (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes, and cannot, therefore, be used in conjunction with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There will, however, be headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one will find not only Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Contributions by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker and deputies'. Significant rulings and statements are indicated by the sub-heading 'Rulings and statements'.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, res = resolution, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
